He Wanted Pure Water.

Since the heated term is on and sunstrokes are a common occurrence, there are many peculiar and decidedly novel calls made upon hotel clerks by the guests. The other evening a traveling salesman from Boston walked up to the counter just before he retired, and said: "Please send some cracked ice and hot water up to my room." Several guests standing near looked at him with amazement and wonderment, thinking, no doubt, that it was only a foolish whim of an eccentric Yankee from the Hub. But, in truth, the call was evidence of the Boston man's knowledge of how to prevent sickness during this torrid weather. A common cause of cholera morbus and like diseases in the summer is the ice water that is drunk. This man wanted bot water for the reason that all the germs are destroyed by the heating. Instead of putting the cracked ice in the water he placed i around the vessel containing the water, and thus had cold water to drink, without the germs from the ice again making the water
