Government Building Which Commends Attention- It Will Cost a Mint of Money-The Style of Architecture Decidedly Attractive.

Thomas Carney, who has just died in Leavenworth, Kan., had held many positions of trust connected with that state's government, and all at periods in her career when he was called upon to struggle with grave difficulties and meet momentous events half way. He was not a native of Kansas, but was born in Delaware county, O., in 1824. His first nineteen years of life were spent on a farm, Ever and anon, and sometimes even but he was ambitious, and in 1843 began to attend a Berkshire, O., school, intending to eventually take up the study of law. In less than a year, however, he was obliged to give up his studies and become a clerk in a Columbus dry goods store at a salary of $50 a year and board. The house finally moved to Cincinnati, where Mr. Carney's

ment secured him admission as a | says. partner under the firm style of Carney, Swift & Co. in 1852. Too steady his health, and in 1858 he purchased farm in Illinois and began stock raising. A year to the dry goods

Mr. Carney was elected to the Kansas legislature from Leavenworth county, and in the following year was chosen, by a large majority, for the second governor of the of Kansas. The state government at that time was in a desperate condition. It was without credit or means of supporting itself, and was unable to protect the interests and persons of its citizens. Mr. Carney left no method which could bring the state to a sound financial basis untried, and soon had restored its credit. He even advanced his own private means to pay the interest on the public debt and support the state troops, Mr. Carney was in January, 1864, made commander-in-chief of the state militia, and a month later was elected to the United States senate. He served two terms as mayor of Leavenworth, and Jan. 22, 1867, was elected to the United States senate for the short term. In 1868 he was again a candidate for nomination for governor, and polled a large vote in the state convention. When Mr. Carney began his political career he withdrew his personal attention from the business of his house and did not again enter upon an active business was subsequently admitted to practice at the supreme bar of Pennsylvania, and the supreme court of the United States in 1861. In 1870 he went to Pittsburg, where he has practiced law ever

Mr. Weir has for many years been interested in politics. He was a delegate to the Charleston convention of 1860, and to the convention at Baltimore which broke away from the Charleston gathering and nominated Stephen A. Douglas for president. In 1866 Mr. Weir was a candidate for congress, but was defeated. He was afterward offered the nomination for presiding judge of Indiana county by the Democrats, but declined. Since then he has not been a candidate for any office. Having been appointed chief justice of Idaho his residence will be at Boise City.

BROOKLYN'S GOVERNMENT BUILDING

It Is Now in Course of Erection and Will Be a Handsome Structure.

The city of Brooklyn, which until the past five years was never much noted for its fine buildings, has undergone a remarkable change within that time, and it is surprising to observe how thoroughly the building craze has taken hold of a city which was erstwhile principally noticeable for the low, squatty character of its structures. These unimposing buildings are being rapidly replaced by beautiful business houses, and of recent years some very splendid public buildings have been erected.

BROOKLYN GOVERNMENT BUILDING. One of the latest additions to the list is to be a massive grauite postoffice and court house, now in course of construction on the plot of ground bounded by Washington, Johnson and Adams streets. The cost of this building, including the site, will be considerably over $1,000,000, and the New York city postoffice, which, in point of architectural beauty, has heretofore held the palm, will sink into the background compared to this magnificent building. The style of architecture of the new building will be what is known as the modern Romanesque, The government buildings erecting at Troy, Springfield, Williamsport and New Bedford are of this style. The building will be eighty feet high to the cornice, and above that will be a mansard roof. At the corner of Washington and Johnson streets a square top will rise to the height of 168 feet above the pavement. It is proposed to fit up the interior of the building in splendid style, although it is said to be doubtful whether the present grand plans of the building are not on too large a scale to fit within the appropriation.

A long haired man, with a look of unutterable yearning in his deep set eyes, stole into the well filled auditorium and took a sent in the rear pew. He listened to the speaker with the closest attention, and seemed to derive the most intense enjoyment from words which were incomprehensible to the majority of the audience. oftener, he would give utterance to a deep sigh, and occasionally he would nod his head in token of emphatic approbation. "Magnificent! sublime!" he was heard to murmur. "You understand him, sir?" inquired the man next the long haired stranger.

"Perfectly, perfectly. Did you ever hear anything more"-"But I can't understand a word he
