8,000 to 10,000 Ital-But these are their

it cost them to live! Not much. At the immigration investigation at New York an Italian immigrant who had been induced to leave his native soil testified that he could live in New York city on 15 cents a day by practicing economy. For 25 cents a day he could live comfortably.

Perhaps this is not a fair example of what it costs an Italian in a large city to live. Let us consider what he eats. First, macaront. meat. Macaroni is one of the cheapest of tritious. An Italian macaroni factory, by the way, is a curious place to visit There are a number of them in Boston. Macaroni is made by hand from flour and water. The dough is put into a cylinder about eighteen inches in diameter, the bottom of which is filled with holes. Then the dough is pressed through. The holes in the the macaroni are made by placing wires through the holes in the cylinder. The macaroni is then taken to a floor above and dried, when it is ready for use. Only Italians can make macaroni. Of course the quality of that made in Boston does not equal that made in Italy. There they do it differently. The grain grown in southern Italy is better adapted for the purpose. It contains more gluten than the grain of more northern countries. The wheat is ground in a mill and is then sifted five times. What is left from the last sifting makes, of course, the finest quality of macaroni. Then it is made into dough and kneaded. There are two different ways of kneading. One is to put a pole into a perpendicular post in the ground. The pole acts as a lever, and the dough is placed in a vessel under one end to which is attached an instrument which, when worked by a man or woman at the other end, churns it to proper degree of stiffness. Another way of kneading is to pile up the dough and walk over it with the bare feet. The best macaroni is made this way. But people in this country will be glad to learn that most of the macaroni we eat is made in New York by a new process, a history of which would contain no disgusting suggestion. But to retnrn to the subject.

The Italian's food costs him but little; a few cents per day will cover it. Now consider how he lives. In Boston the Italian population inhabits one part of the city. The Italian families live in tenements, usually three families to a room. Two families in a room is "aristocracy." Three families is "common people," so that the Italians rent costs him but little. In regard to his clothes, All first-class Companies giving the highest | you can see for yourself. Look at the garments of the grinder as he stands in front of your window and works away at "Sweet Violets." Perhaps his clothes cost him $25 a year, more likely $15.

The employments of the Italians are endemic-that is, peculiar to themselves. Did you ever see an American organ grinder? The Italian is at work early in the morning. He takes out his organ and starts out on his round. In the summer time the majority of the hurdy gurdy men go out in the country and return at night. Their organs cost all the way from $75 for a fairly good one to $600 for a nice piano. The average is about $100. Some of the organs are made in this country. Some are imported from England and some come from Italy. The monkeys -those agile animals that delight the children-are picked up in various places. They are bought from sailors occasionally, but generally obtained from dealers. Sometimes the Italian dispenses with his hand organ and takes to monkeys altogether. There is a man in Boston who has trained a lot of monkeys and who eats and sleeps in the same room with them. On one side of the room are the monkeys. There are seven or eight of them confined in cages on the wall. On the other side is the Italian. The intervening space is occupied with a stove, a cradle, broken harps, stools, a bureau and other things, which take up all the available space.

What a place to live in! But in Boston, as in other large cities where Italians congregate, there are other employments besides organ grinding and exhibiting monkeys. One of the most profitable employments is less than $1, what does he do with the bal-railroads, grind for music, is illustrated by his employment. workers. They make bronze vases, figures, that are necessary for the work. One man does the molding while the other finishes and puts on the bronze. The boy goes over the work and touches up the spots; and makes himself otherwise generally useful. Vases of the kighly ornamental kind are sold for sixty cents a pair. Smaller ones bring from thirty to fifty cents a pair, as much as the seller can get for them.

> Boston has its army of ragpickers. If an accurate estimate of the amount of money represented by the findings of ragpickers in Boston could be made the results would be amazing. This is the woman's field. Nothing escapes their eyes. Everything goes into their bags. Boston's Italian quarter has a queen. She is called the "Queen of Italy." A visit to her workshop would be a revelation to many, but it would be short. It requires the best of lungs and the toughest of olfactories. The "queen" has twelve children. She occupies a basement and first floor. On the floor of the basement is deposited the result of the day's work. What a collection is that!

GEN. ALVIN P. HOVEY

Named for Governor by the Republicans of Indiana.

Gen. Alvin Paterson Hovey, named by the Republicans of Indiana for governor, is a native and resident of Posey county. This county became celebrated, early in the century, by the foundation of the Rappites (Communists) at New Harmony. In due time their society "run out," and Robert Owen and his Scotch Lanarkers succeeded. They failed, of course; but Indiana gained the talents of Robert Dale Owen and his brother, the noted geologist, and New Harmony is still a place of curious interest. Alvin P. Hovey was born on the Ohio river side of the county, and his boyhood was spent His youth was one of poverty, and his education only that bar in 1843, at t age of twenty-tw His polities we. Democratic, and as a Democrat he was chosen to the Indiana consultional convention of 1850, and circuit judge of the Third judicial circu t from 1851 to 1854 and judoe of the supr e court of the state for a term. From 1856 to 1858 he was United States district attorney for Indiana. Soon after came the war and he entered the service early as colonel of the Twenty-fourth Indiana volun-

His military career was remarkably brilliant, and his services in the field were quite equaled by his ability as civil administrator of districts in which he held command. His ready application of the principles of law to the exigencies of the military situation were of immense advantage to the government. April 28, 1862, he was appointed brigadier general of volunteers, and in the Vicksburg campaign of 1863 he won high honors. Gen. Grant credits him with the success at Champion Hill. The next year he was brevetted major general for distinguished services. In 1865 he retired from the army, and was appointed minister to Peru, which place he resigned in 1870. In 1886 he was elected to congress as a Republican. He is 67 years old, and still in vigorous health. His opponent, Col. C. C. Matson, is also a soldier of good record, and the two will undoubtedly make this year's Indiana campaign exceedingly lively.

Count Von Moltke's Snuff.

During the winter of 1870-71, Count von Moltke, while his headquarters were at Ver- MANTLES! sailles, ran short of spuff. Failing to find any "sneeshin" of the brand he liked in the local tobacco stores, he instructed a subordinate at the war office in Berlin to forward him a packet of his "own peculiar" rappee. The snuff was bought, paid for, sent to Versailles, and duly charged to the account of the nation. When the time came for examining the book, after peace had been concluded, the official intrusted with the revision of the accounts of the war office came upon this startling item: "For one pound of extra fine, with-of-Tonquin-bean-perfume-highly-impregnated snuff, by his excellency, Count von Moitke, commanded, three thalers, seven and a half silbergroschen." The auditor would not pass this unprecedented item, but made a memorandum of the entry, referred it to his superior, with the suggestion that as upon the national exchequer. The item and the suggestion passed from one official to another until it came to the crown lawyers, who gave their opinion that the state could not pay the snuff claim. Von Moltke was officially addressed and requested to pay for his snull and he at once complied with the demand. -The Argonaut.
