But this is not all. As though to add insult to injury Mr. Bowell has since kept his mouth closed and allowed damaging reports to be given currency as to the announcement of the mar recent visits (the beginning of last week when James Herring had an evening party at which C. J. Bowell was a guest, while his father paid his attentions to his intended next door), John Stevenson tendered the old gentleman an invitation to make his home his stopping place on the Tuesday evening previous and up to the hour of the wedding on Wednesday. This was accepted in the presence of some friends of the race of twenty-five or a hundred miles. Stevenson families. On Saturday morning, with the mail conveying the letter to Mrs. Stevenson breaking up the wedding, came another epistle to Mr. John Stevenson, thanking him for his kind offer, but declining it "for reasons which Mrs. E. Stevenson could give if she chose," and with the same mail was a third letter cancelling the services of the archdeacon. In the face these facts it is cruel for a man to endeavo

to throw all the blame on a woman. Mr. Bowell personally wrote Archdeacor Bedford-Jones, asking him to officiate at the marriage of himself and Mrs. Stevenson, to which the clergyman replied, saying that he would be happy to do so and complimenting him upon his good fortune. When the archdeacon received the letter from Mr. Bowell on Saturday, notifying him that his services would not be required, he was much taken aback, and wrote Mr. Bowell an indignant letter.

Just what action may be taken in the premises we are not in a position to say. Mrs. Stevenson feels her position very keenly, but being of a weak, nervous temperament is not inclined to go into court. Her friends, however, say that such must be done. It is hoped in the interest of womanhood such will be the case.

Mrs. Stevenson is a widow of forty summers, accomplished and pleasing in her manner. She was born at Bath, and in 1869 married E. S. D. Stevenson, third son of the late Hon. John Stevenson. Stevenson will be known to the older mem of the commons and senate when we state that for some time he was private secretary to his father in the legislative assembly He was a graduate of Toronto University about entering life in real carnest. As the issue of the marriage there is a son about 17 years, who resides with his mother on Bridge street. Dame rumor has been very cruel with Mrs. Stevenson since the breaking up of the marriage. One of the most cruel thrusts is that the affair is of her own seeking and that it was Bowell's money she was after. This is untrue. Since the death of her husband Mrs. Stevenson has resided in her own house in this place, her mother living with her. Of means she has ample to keep her. She has an interest in the Stevenson estate, which includes the property here and the piano works at Kingston. Comfore table and happy and moving in good society in Napance, she had no occasion to seek a change in life.
