PUGILISM TO THE FRONT.

A Fight Which Created Great Enthusiasm - 1 Pag Completely Knocked Out.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 27.—The sporting fraternity of San Francisco never experienced such a surprise as it did last night, when Conley, the Ithaca giant, was knocked out in less than six minutes by Joe Mc-Auliffe, who, less than a year ago, was considered little less than a novice. The fight, which had been looked forward to with the keenest interest for weeks, terminated so suddenly that the two thousand spectators could hardly realize for a moment that Conley could not rise from the floor, but when, after a lapse of ten seconds, Conley still remained prostrated and his seconds crossed the ring and carried him to his chair, a perfect storm of applause broke out and in an instant the shouts were taken up by the crowd in the streets. The one opinion was that Copley made a serious mistake in ever accepting the proposition to meet McAuliffe. Peter Jackson, the colored champion from Australia, who had been matched to meet the winner of the content, and will now meet McAuliffe in December, was among the spectators and was not slow in expressing himself very sarcastically about Conley's fighting. The only effort made by Conley during the battle was his atten.pt to hold Mc Auliffe in clinch and push him against the ropes. He succeeded in this several times, but the terrible right-hander he received in the neck in the middle of the second round completely settled him.

MY LORD MUST GO.

His Recall is Practically Demanded-Secretary Bayard is Very Diplomatic. NEW YORK, Oct. 27. - The Herald's Washington dispatch says Mr. Phelps, minister at London, was yesterday instructed by the president, through the secretary of state, to intimate to Lord Salisbury without delay, that under all circumstances the president is of the opinion that the good understanding of both countries would be promoted if the head of the British legation here were changed. After the special cabinet meeting yesterday the correspondent asked the secretary of state what the administration was doing in the matter. Se cretary Bayard replied :

"It is doing everything that it can." "Has Minister West's government been notified of his imprudent action ?" asked the correspondent. "That is a self-evident fact. It has been notified, and the notification was prompt one.

After full discussion of the matter yesterday it was decided to supplement the cablegram of Thursday, to Mr. Phelps, by another, which would be a formal notice to the Marquis of Salisbury that the obnoxious minister must be withdrawn. The cable gram was accordingly sent, and it is, expected that Lord Sackville will very shortly man, whose wonderful voice is now hushed forever, the gifted child of genius and song, depart the country on a leave of absence not to return.

ART GALLERIES.

of the Stage-A Bank Gone to Wreck -A Frolicksome Artiste Who Seems to be Immortal.

NEW YORK, Oct. 27 .- Number Five Hundred! Altough the letters I have sent out over the world for the past fourteen years have very much exceeded the number indicated above, it was not until about ten years ago that I resolved to let the numbers run continuously as long as I was able to write. I never approach a new hundred without asking myself if I shall be spared to see another. I asked myself this question two years ago when I began four hundred and now I can answer it with safety. But

No matter, if we reach the goal all | right; if not, all right; and so we enter on 500 with hope and trust, thanking the kind friends who have followed me so patiently and so long.

Notwithstanding the beating of drums, the blaring of horns, the whizzing of rockets, and the wild shouts of the political clans art galleries to see some of the grand collections in which New York now revels. There are many worthy of mention. The American Art Galleries, the Society of American Artists, Goupil's on Fifth Avenue, terribly mutilated at Magyarzsakos, Hun- and others. But when it comes to superb art, art that needs no explanation, art that the world acknowledges without question, art before which genius and power and wealth stand wrapt in admiration and awe, there is nothing in New York that will equal the magnificent collection to be seen in the art rooms conducted by Herman Schaus & Co., at 5th Avenue and 26th Street. Not large but rare and costly. bearing the stamp of mighty names whose weight is not to be measured by gold but dian unds, so rare and costly are theyand many others immortal in the world of art. This beautiful collection is the result Mr. Stanley's last words on leaving Cario of Mr. Herman Schaus' late visit to Europe, where for five months he travelled patiently through the art galleries and studios, and gathered these gems with the exqusite taste The King of Wurtemburg has squandcred of a connoisseur and the admiration of a large sums of money on the Americans now lover. It is with a sweet sense of restfulness that I step out of the roar of the street into the calm quiet of those beautiful rooms, and as I look upon these children of immortal genius, *ime, space, and distance float away from me and I revel in the bright green fields of lands far away. I see the soft sunlight, I breathe the sweet air, I catch the perfume of the apple blossoms, inhale the fragrance of the flowers. I turn my eyes and am transported as it were into another world. It is night upon the desert, the far hills are sinking out of sight, yet in that silent wilderness there is life, fierce, wild, untamable, majestic. The canvas seems to tremble with the genius of Gerome. Out on the desert in silent majesty reposes a tiger, glorious in his strength, beautiful in his repose, and yet more terrible than a army with banners. His mate disports herself in the cool sand, and the pair are the supreme monarchs of that silent wild. Almost beside Gerome's wonderful picture is a superb canvass by Van Marcke. Under the cool shade in the forest some needs no skilful guide to point him out the beauties of this admirable work. They ap peal alike to the humblest and the greatest. It is nature, simple nature. But, O, how beautiful, how inviting! Schreyer is present in a magnificent work, which vibrates with all of his old time vigor. It glows with color and with life. The fierce Bedouin and his horse are fit companions. The heart, almost insensible to human pity and human suffering, watches each step of his horse as tenderly as a lover does the footsteps of his soul's elect.

It is impossible in these brief letters to do the slightest justice to this magnificent collection. It is full of little gems that meet you at every turn. In two little pic tures there are kittens by Jul. Adams, and what kittens they are. Nothing like them have ever been seen here before, and we thought we had seen some good cats and kittens, but nothing like these. Palmeroil has a lovely scene from the Forest of Fontainbleau, and Kleezynski, a Russian, has a sleighing scene that would stir the blood of man or woman when the thermometer dashing along, guided by a strong hand. The driver is not thinking of his horses but of the bonnie sonsie lady to his side. The face of the man is a splendid bit of portraiture, and is one of the gems of the collection. The peculiarity of Mr. Schaus' beautiful gallery is its absolute purity. If Bougerone is represented it is not by one of these suggestive indecencies, intended for the lecherous perlieus of a bachelor's private establishment. Bougerone can paint heaven-born pictures, and doess; and if you want to see his best work go to Schaus', and not to the Hoffman. I regret that I have not more space to devote to the fine arts this week. as simply from an educational standpoint, consider it one of the most worthy to which I can direct the attention of my readers when they visit New York.

It is about fifteen or sixteen years since New York ran crazy over the debut of a young Russian soprano, whose phenomenal voice promised to eclipse that of the world's sweet nightingale, Patti. Far from beautiful, not even pretty, there was about the that captivates women and turns the heads of men. Her singing was a wonder, her acting a revelation, but with her matchless art was linked the curse of imperious way wardness and unreliability, which, notwithstanding her wonderful talent, made her more feared than courted. Managers who would have paved her pathway with gold shrank affrighted at the ungovernable temper which brooked no guidance or control. After a trial of several seasons she finally departed for Europe, and the operatic world on this side lost sight of her. Nilsson, Gerster, and many others succeeded her, but the magic tones of the wayward Russian were not forgotten, even in their triumphs, by the charmed and exclusive circle that makes up Mr. McAllister's Court Roster of the Elite Four Hundred. The other day, passing through Washington square, that peculiar bailiwick where Lias, Aspasia, and Phrynne almost touch elbows with some of the creamiest of our creme de la creme, my attention was directed to a very unpretentious house, and here, an utter wreck, was all that remained of the once wayward Diva. Who would recognize in this stricken wo-haps in mercy the present is sealed to her, and she dreams on from day to day in the gilded glories of the past. A movement is now being made by some prominent musicians here to send her back to Europe, that and pass away. Only a little while ago of the brightest went to hear Gerster, queens of song, and lovel as she was gifted, good as she was beautiful. O, how New York idolized and petted her! She especially a woman's favorite, and no woman felt jealous of her husband's admiration of her, for she in her private life was sans reproche. But the glorious organ that won pitiable to see this beautiful woman trying still to occupy the place she once held in the affection and admiration of the public, but her power was gone, and they tossed her aside as heartlessly as they would a broken bauble, to cry, "Ho! to the rising sun!"

But while speaking of prima donnas, Lydia Thompson is back with us again after an absence of many years. It must be twenty years at least since Lydia appeared | Supreme Court, in refusing to hear their among us with her troupe of British blondes, | appeal, practically terminates the legal whose scanty costume left nothing to be imagined where so much was lavishly disclosed. All the front seats in the parquette were engaged weeks in advance, and I am sorry to say it was not solely by our jeunesse dores, but lines of old bald headed sinners worshipped at the shrine of this golden haired divinity, and in a few weeks, despite the protests of the secular press and the bitter denunciations of the religious press, she and her blonds beauties carried the town by storm, and after a triumphal march from one end of the United States to the other, she returned to Albion's Isle with a clear fifty thousand dollars. Mr. Sam Colville, her manager, bagged almost as much, and with his savings he purchased the lease of the 4th street theatre, which he held to the time of his death. Lydia is with us once more, bright and beaming as ever. She kicks up her shapely little heels as lively as of yore, and sings with the vim of a girl of eighteen. I am afraid to think how old she is. I think I venture nothing when I say that one half of the audience which greeted her on the occasion of her first appearance have been in their graves for years. Sam Colville, her first manager in the United States, was buried over a year ago, and two-thirds of the actors and actresses who appeared with her are now inhabitants of the happy hunting grounds. But Lydia seems to be immortal. Her houses have been crowded all the week, and half the dudes in town are crazy over her.

Gilbert and Sullavan's new opera, "The Yoeman of the Guard," is not an unequivocal success, neither is it an absolute failure. We have got into the habit of accepting without question anything from these authors. Such delightful contributions to our light operatic stage are Pinatore, Iolanthe, Ruddigore, Patience, The Pirates of Penzance and the Mikado, that no one looked for a failure in their latest venture; but the first night it fell flat notwithstanding the expectations of the public, and its run is likely to be limited. This is a great disappointment, for the world is indebted to them are still young enough to make us indulge in the hope that the days of their usefulness are not yet past. Of course, ope of the very marked sensations of the week has been the exposure of the spiritual fraud by the original Fox sisters. It has been a terrible shock to the thousands of dupes here, but the latest revelation is that the celebrated mediums are now possessed with the devil. Whether they are or whether they are not it is certain that they have raised sheel with the spiritualists. Meetings are being held all over the town denouncing them as liars, and Madame Diss Debar, from her summer residence on Blackwell's Island, says they are

Of course the political battle rages with fury, but if you want to see a regular old time camp meeting go to the Drygoudsmen's republican meeting, held every day at twelve o'clock on Broadway. It is like an old fashioned Methodist revival. They sing and shout and clap their hands. One of our marks zero. The high-mettled team is great dailies, which is supposed to see as deep into a millstone as some of its neighbors, remarks, "that some one is going to be disappointed on the sixth of November. I wonder if this is so? Truly yours, BROADBRIM,

Who is Wright? BATTLE CREEK. Mich., Oct. 25.-The body of a man of about 50, identified as that of George Wright, who has relatives in Kingston, Ont., was found in the woods last night, on the bank of St. Mary's lake, five miles north of Battle Creek, by a party spearing fish. There was a bullet hole in his forehead, and a bulldog revolver in his hand. He was cheaply dressed, but his clothing was new and good. Between $5 and $6 in Canadian bills, and a few pennies, were found in his pockets. It is supposed he committed suicide on Monday.
