ELECTRICAL RAIL WAYS.

Science has well remarked that this year will settle the question as to whether electricity can be economically and efficiently applied in the propulsion of street railway cars. It is pointed out that at the beginroad and motor company did not have a car running ; the Thomson-Houston companythen the Van Depoele company-had half a dozen roads in operation; the Daft company about as many. To-day the Sprague company has thirty roads completed or in course of construction; the Thomson-Houston company about as many the Daft company perhaps a dozen, with a number of other systems represented by single roads in different localities. It is but natural that clear the tracks of snow and ice.

Parties having Barley, Rye, Oats, Buckwheat | be kept clear even by a special car provided or other grain for sale, please call or write for with a plow and brushes worked by electricity. The track is buried under the snow and is not seen for three months at a time. Electricity is, therefore, unapplicable to cars running on it. And to some people the thought has been quite disappointing. They had hoped, oh so fondly, that science would develop some motor that would replace the horses and relieve them, in their weak, weary and wasted condition, of the burden now imposed upon them, that would permit of them being led away to some sequestered spot to die. Electricity won't do here; the bone exhibition will go on.

AFRICAN ANCESTRY.

A notable article indeed is that of Judge Tourgee in the December number of the Forum. It is on the negro's ancestry, and embraces the following remarkable statement:

"As soon as the American negro seeks to rise above the level of the former time he finds himself confronted with the past of his race and the woes of his kindred. The white man traces his ancestry back for generations; knows whence they came where they lived, and guesses what they did. To the American negro the past is only darkness replete with unimaginable horrors. Ancestors, he has none. Until within a quarter of a century he had no record of his kindred. He had no father, no mother; only a sire and dam. Being bred for market he had no name, only a distinguishing appellative like that of a horse or a dog. Even in comparison with these animals he was at a disadvantage; there was no "herdbook" of slaves. The remembrance is not pleasant and can never become It is exasperating, galling, degrading. Every freedman's life is coloured by this shadow. Thus the life of a negro, as a slave, freedman, and racial outcast, offers undoubtedly the richest mine of romantic material that has opened to the Englishspeaking novelist since the Wizard of the North discovered and depicted the common life of Scotland. The negro as a man has an immense advantage over the negro as a servant, being an altogether new character in fiction."

The opening of the extract is part of a dismal and deeply-affecting wall over a condition of things that lasting, enduring, would be most deplorable. Those who have been in slavery and are now free can never forget the wormwood and the gall, can never expunge from memory the reminis' cences of the time when they didn't know much about their relations in life, when they were not supposed to know anything, and when the slave-traders, by their most abominable traffic, were responsible for the loss of all identification by members of the farily. It is quite true that less was thought of the pedigree of the colored man than of the horse and the ox, and the exist. ence of such a degredation of one branch of the human race by another branch of it must ever remain one of the greatest disgraces of the nineteenth century. Judge Tourgee, however, makes the most peculiar of all statements when he says : "The over the negro as a servant, being altogether a new character in fiction." The precise meaning of this phrase is not apparent, but generally by beneficial results. True, there are coloured men who cannot rise above their former level who are less useful to themselves and to the community in which they locate than when under coercive and tyrannical discipline. But they are not of less account in the world's great summing up than a large proportion of the whites whose aims, ambitions and accomplishments are destructive and detrimental in their tendencies. It is not a fiction that the coloured people of the United States are gaining in influence and intelligence, that the younger generations, knowing nothing of the past and unoppressed by its memories, are pushing to the front and meeting with a great deal of senseless and unjust opposition. The whites of the United States, especially during an election campaign, profess great friendship for the coloured race, but it is a superficial fondness. The disposition is to draw the old ning of the year the Sprague electric rail. lines of dis inction between the races, to keep one class under subordination to the other, to maintain a sort of social and racial bondage which is incompatible with the reigning apirit of liberty to make the war of the sixties barren of all but fictitious results.

PUBLIC SENTIMENT.

To-day the property owners and long leese holders are voting on the railway bonus by-laws, and we hope they are so marking their ballots as to secure the passhorses should be first displaced where the age of these by-laws by a large and sweepbest economical electrical system is allow- ing majority. That public sentiment is able. But if the old prejudices against the | favourable to them was made quite clear overhead wires in our city streets remain by the meeting held in the opera house last the real problem of displacing horses in city | evening. The people as a whole, the ratetramways has not been solved. The ideal payers as a body, are enthusiastic supportsystem for such work is the storage battery, ers of the railway schemes, believing, as and the experiments in that direction are | they do, that these schemes are the best of few. In New York the | mittee, and that the development of them, cars on the Fourth Avenue road are being | the carying of them to completion, means slowly equipped, but at great cost. So progress and prosperity to the city. The that, although a number of roads have been I issue is not one that concerns Mr. Rathbun equipped with electricity the work has particularly, as some of the by-laws' opponbeen in the direction of suburban tramways. | ents would have the people believe. Certainly the application of | tion between the city and a thousand miles electricity to the Kingston street railway is | square of country now very infrequently and out of the question. The track could not | indirectly reached, and whether such a communication will not tend to the growth and enlargement of the city.

Two classes were conspicuously represented at the meeting of last evening—the young men and the workingmen. These may not be influential on the list of to-day's voters, but their position, their opinion, their desires are not to be ignored. The young men are interested in whatsoever contributes to the expansion of the business interests of the city. They want to remain here, to become abiding and prosperous citizens, and they see no hope of reaping abundantly from the fruits of their labour unless every opportunity for advancement is taken advantage of by those who are entrusted with the conduct of our public affairs. If the young men had votes on the by-laws over four-fifths of them would be cast in favour of the by-laws. Then the workingmen are loyally and warmly supporting the bylaws—that is the actual, the genuine workingmen. They have faith in the city and in its possibilities. They want to see it become a great railway centre. They want to see the traffic to it increase, inasmuch as the more trade there is the more work and the better wages. Whether the by laws are defeated or carried they
