boss, too, by all accounts, though he has little sister who was born while the Chicago therefore, to be a child of promise. Benjamin Harrison McKee, as the full name of the president-elect's grandson and pet runs, is but twenty months old; and, making all allowances for the natural tendency of journalists to find "cuteness" in a president's grandson, the little fellow really is very bright and attractive.

He sits next to his grandfather at the table and is the boss of the house when that gentleman is at home; he has already mastered that fact, and shouts with the delight of a suddenly freed child when he sees his great ancestor coming up the front walk. Little Ben is the son of J. Robert McKee and Mrs. Mamie Harrison McKee. Mr. McKee is in the wholesale boot and shoe trade, and is the son of one of the wealthiest men in Indianapolis. When he won Gen. Harrison's daughter he was allowed to marry her only on the condition that the young people would agree to make their home with the Harrisons, and this explains why they all have lived together in the general's house at No. 674 Delaware street.

Often when visitors were coming in platoons to see his distinguished grandfather, young Benjamin McKee would be carried in on his grandmother's shoulder, and, nestling there, would shake in great glee the hands of the callers. He also persists in crawling into the room of the president-elect, and belping him confer with party leaders. No one will restrain him, and he seems to know it. Already he is as big a man as Gen. Harrison, and if he keeps on growing, he will be a strong factor in the next administration. His sister Mary, though not quite able to belp her brother receive visitors, gives promise of taking much honor to herself in Washington. It is a long time since there have been babies in the White House, and there will surely be delightful amusement some of these coming days, when the two Harrison grandchildren shall insist upon descending to the Blue room, or some other room, to help the president shake the hands of the long lines of people.

Benjamin Harrison and Caroline Scott were married when he was but twenty and she nineteen years of age, and became the parents of two children. The first was the son Russell, and the next was the daughter Mary Scott. Each is living and married. Russell caught the heart of Minnie, the daughter of Senator Saunders, of Nebraska, and lives with her at the head of a stock farm near Helena, Montana. Mary Harrison married J. R. McKee, a merchant in Indianapolis. While these children were growing, the father, busy with law cases and battles and politics, and then with law cases again, increased his earnings, but never got them far beyond his constantly growing expenses. Nevertheless the young Harrisons saw a great deal of society, and Miss Mamie was quite a belle. They had dances and receptions for their friends and made the Harrison home quite a social center in Indianapolis. Russell Harrison never became prominent in Indiana politics, and in a state so intensely political, non-action means either total indifference to or incapacity for politics. He is a business man, and a rather quiet one. Soon after the campaign began he came to his father's at the latter's request, and though he did some work during the campaign he did it so, quietly and escaped the newspaper men so successfully father's habitual a large share of his caution. It is not probable that he will be more active at Washington, as his tastes and capacities do not run in that direction. The pride and the hope of the family seem to be centered on the grandson. There is in the Harrison family, as in many other noted families, a curious tendency to "atavism," as RUSSELL HARRISON. the Darwinians call it; that is, the same or similar traits reappear in each second or third generation. From the English regicide Harrison to the Harrison who signed the Declaration of Independence was considerable of a gap; but the president of a month in 1841 is partially reproduced in his descendants. Although Benjamin Harrison's father was once a member of congress, he was such a quiet one that he will probably live in history only as the son of one president and the father of another; and it is reasonable to expect that after the present president-elect the family greatness will take a long rest till the grandson comes to the front.

A Queen's Remedy for Nervousness.

The queen of Sweden, who, it is well known, is a great sufferer from nervousness, has lately found much relief in adopting the following mode of life, at the advice of her physicians. She rises at the early hour of gweeps and dusts her room, and then breakfasts lightly on a glass of milk. The morning she spends in gardening. After lunch her majesty sleeps an hour, and then is again in the open air until 6, when she dines; Bedtime at 9 closes the day. I wonder how many English sufferers from nervousness would care to cure themselves in this fashion. - London Life.

cinnati, is now 43 years of age, and began his editor of The Chicago Inter Ocean, and before he became editor of The Journal was connected with The Indianapolis News. He has long been intrusted with much important work for his party, and was a delegate cago, where he did for Col. New, who engineered Gen. Harrison's campaign there. Mr. Halford's hair is turning gray. He glasses, is slender and of medium height. His manner is pleasant and obliging. His religious tendencies are as strong as those of Mr. Harrison, although he is a Methodist instead of a Presbyterian, being a lay preacher in his church. Up to the beginning of the recent campaign be had never missed a weekly prayer meeting. He has a wife and daughter.

When Mr. Halford was a reporter he was what is known in the west as a "hustler." and many entertaining stories are told about that period of his life. This one is too good to let slip:

Being assigned to report a hanging, he determined to find out if possible whether consciousness deserted the victim at the moment the drop fell or not. In conversation with the condemned man he said:

"My friend, have you any objection to help settle a scientific question! There has been a good deal of talk in the newspapers lately as to whether a man who is hung has any consciousness or feeling after the drop falls. Now, if you choose, you can settle this question."

"How" asked the surprised man. "Well," said Halford, "suppose you have consciousness after the drop falls. If you will just wiggle the little finger of the right hand that will be a signal to me. I will know you are conscious as long as the finger keeps wiggling. Will you do it?"

The man was not easily persuaded, but Halford's eloquence finally overcame him. It is not recorded that the fluger wiggled.

WENT BACK ON PARNELL.

Capt. O'Shea, Who Has Been Playing the Role of Informer.

Capt. O'Shea, who was once the object of the misplaced confidence of Mr. Parnell and, in fact, of many of the most prominent members of the Irish party, has made a great sensation by testifying against Parnell in the celebrated Times suit, and playing the disgraceful role of the informer. It is assumed that he is well paid for taking the part of the traitor. He is an extremely adroit and unscrupulous man, and one who would hesitate at nothing that would tend to the accomplishment of his own ends.

CAPT. OSHEA ON THE WITNESS BOX. He is a great poser. In court he is dressed elaborately, strikes attitude for the exhibition of his muscular physique, constantly pulls out of his pocket a perfumed white handkerchief with a blue border, toys with splendid gold glasses, and acts the exquisite to perfection. But all the same by his traitorous action he has probably brought contumely upon himself as long as he lives.

JULIUS CÆSAR BURROWS.

He Has Been Making a "Still Hunt" for the House Speakership. Of course the gossip of the country just | READ, now is all about the men who will secure positions in the Harrison administration. One of those talked about very freely is Julius Cæsar Barrows, representative in congress from the Fourth Michigan district. Mr. Burrows has a great desire to be speaker of the next house of representatives, He has more than a desire; he has a conviction that his desire will be realized, and so have many of his friends. It is stated in recent dispatches that Mr.

Burrows was satisfied early in the recent campaign that Mr. Harrison 3 would not only be elected, but that the majority of the house would be Republican, and he began laying plans at once for the speakership. In short, he conducted, with some vigor

Mr. Burrows bails from Kalamazoo, He is tall, has square shoulders, and is as erect as a soldier-in fact, he was a soldier from 1862 to 1864. He weighs 200 pounds. This information is found duly set forth in the pages of Mr. J. H. Truesdell's "Our States-

Mr. Durrows was born in Eric county. Pa, in 1837. He studied in the common schools and the local academy. When he was graduated from the latter institution be studied law. Then he went to war, and when it was over he removed to Kalamazoo, where he became prosecuting attorney. He devoted a good deal of his time to politics and was a member of the house during the Fortythird, Forty-sixth, Forty-seventh and Fortyninth congresses, being re-elected to the Fiftieth. In 1884 President Arthur offered to him the assistant attorney generalship, but he declined.
