A BRIGHT BOY.

He Discovers That the Finny Tribe Has Some Intelligence.

A Boston naturalist, visiting a friend in a Massachusetts city lately, was interested in noting that the young son of his host, Walter G-. 11 years old, had a collection of cocoons and butterflies of a character that argued no little industry and intelligence on the boy's part.

"Is he interested in any other branch of ra'ural historyf' the visitor asked.

"Oh, yes," said the father, "he is always collecting, and inquiring into things. Last summer, while we were staying at Lake Quinsignmond, he made what seemed to me quite an interesting discovery."

"What was it, pleaser" "We had been fishing one day, and had taken quite a number of fishes of all kinds. Walter, as usual, took a marked interest in the fishes, and, in order that he might study them more at leisure, I constructed a little reservoir out of a wicker basket which we had with us, in this way: First we dug a hole in the sand on the beach, in a secluded place, and then sunk the basket in the sand, so that its upper edge, when it was put in place, was about four inches from the surface of the

"The basket filled quickly with water, and then we put the fish into it, and left them over night, supposing that the height of the upper rim of the basket above the water would prevent the fish from leaping out. Next morning Walter went bright and early to get the fishes, but they had all disappeared.

"As it was quite unlikely that any one could have found and taken the fish, we were forced to the conclusion that they had jumped out of the basket.

"A few days afterward Walter went fishing alone, and returned somewhat late in the afternoon without any fish. I asked him if he had caught none.

"'Oh, yes; caught quite a lot,' said he.

"'Where are they?" "'In the basket.'

"'Won't they jump out, just as the others

"Oh, no-not this time, papa." "I smiled, resolving to let the event teach him. Next morning he wished me to go with him and see if the fish were in the basket. went, expecting to find nothing but water in it, as before, but was astonished to find that there were quite a number of fishes in it.

"Walter, you know, is a boy of extremely few words; it is necessary to question him to get anything out of him. So I asked him to explain how he managed to keep those from Januaring out.

"Wed, papa,' said he, 'I caught some fishes yesterday morning, and I thought I would try an experiment. I came and got the basket from the place where we left it the other day, and carried it around there behind that same? bar. I sunk it in a place where there was water enough in the sand to fill the ballet, but where if the fish jumped out they could only flop around on the sand and couldn't get to the water.

I let each one stay there in the sun quite a while, but not long enough to suffocute, and then, when all were pretty thoroughly punished, I put them, one by one, back in the basket.

"'After every one had jumped out, I was curious to see whether they would jump a second time. Two of them did leap out | Francaise, will light a duel to-morrow. The again, and I let those stay out on the hot sand a little longer than I did the first time. Then I put them back in the basket.

"No m re tried to jump out, and I was sure that they had learned their lesson. So I took the basket, and pulled it along through the water to the same place where we had it before, and sunk it there. And you see, none the fishes have jumped out. They're all Lere, every one! "Walter was so gleeful over the success of his experiment that he had really become quite talkative. He had, it was plain, succeeded in conveying at to the intelligence of these fishes, by an experience very unpleasant to them, that they had better not leap out of the basket." As his story is a true one, it seems to prove that fishes have a considerable degree of intelligence. - Youth's Companion.

At School With Her Children.

Among the pupils of the state normal school is a young widow who has three little children in the primary department. There is something fine and inspiring in the thought of that gracious young mother going to school every day with her own little ones, full of patience and ambition, setting herself at the task of educating herself above the petty incidents and occasions of life, growlag round in a mental way, fair and comforting at all times. If a woman is rightly educated this is what will have been accomplished in her, no more. She will simply be in better and truer proportion.-New Orieans Picayune.

Free Towns of Germany.

Hamburg and Bremen have finally surrendered most of their ancient privileges as free hanse towns and become incorporated in the general German customs system. They still retain the right of representation in the Prussian and German parliaments. Extensive improvements have been made in contemplation of the change. Whole blocks of old houses have been demolished, new warehouses and new quarry built, and the wharf Quarter transfermed. - Obicogo Heraid.

AN M. P.'. BREACH OF TRUST.

Division of London Elect a Conservative.

LONDON, Nov. 29 -Robert Gent Davis, the Kennington division of Lambeth, was committed to prison on Tuesday for contempt of court in failing to pay £3778 due by him as administrator of his uncle's estate. He appeared in court to-day and offered to applogize and to refund the money. The judge, however, refused handed to the sheriff for execution. Davis debt was subscribed by Tory members of Parlianient to prevent the disgrace of the arrest of a member for a broach of trust.

In the House of Commons to-day Timothy Healy asked what steps Mr. Smith, the Gov. ernment leader, intended to recummend the . House to take regarding the charge against Mr. Davis of using money received in a fiduciary capacity.

Mr. Smith denied the existence of any proof to justify him in asking the House to pronounce judgment on Mr. Davis.

Edmund Robertson (Lib.) reminded the House that the expulsion of a member should be decreed for a breach of trust, and he asked if Mr. Davis' conduct did not amount to that.

Mr. Smith protested against hasty action vin a matter affecting the character and honor of a member.

Mr. Healy intimated that un'ess the Covernment acted in the matter-brown move on Tuesday next that a write be issue for an election to till the seat now held by Mr. Davis.

Mr. Davis has been imprisoned.

Mr. Bradlaugh moved to adjourn the House in order to call attention to the continued imprisonment of Mr. Moroney 1: Kilmainham jail for contempt of court unde the Coercion Act. He said that Mr. Moropey was suffering in health and becoming insane. He represented the bankruptcy proceedings had been us. with the view to compel Mr. Moroney divulge certain things which Moroney refused to divuige. He Obtained the Position.

"Do I know of any case where an applicant for the police succeeded in deceiving the examiners?' said a gentleman the other day. "Well, yes, I can tell you of one, but I believe there are not many others. About a year ago a young man applied for examination, and acquitted himself very creditably. He lacked a quarter of an inch in height, however, and although he had what is called considerable pull no power on earth could secure his appointment.

"He wasn't discouraged though, and came up for succeeding examinations only to be reminded each time that but, for that fraction of an inch he might hope to swing a locust.

"He was just about giving up all hope when a bright idea struck him. He had his hair cut short, and as it grew trained it to stand up straight and stiff. It wasn't very long before this treatment produced the desired effect, and he could pride himself on being the possessor of a head of hair of surprising thickness. But its appearance was not in the least extraordinary, so nicely did he have it trimmed.

"Well, the result was the next time he went under the measure he fully qualified, and today he is the proud wearer of a patrolman's uniform, and a good officer Le makes."-New York Evening Sun.

Next day he persuaded her to go to there she met his mother, but when she spoke of her supposed engagement Mrs. Walpole told her the Captain was only a friend and that he would be ruined if he did not marry a rich girl Mrs. Walpole contrived to have her put out of the hotel. Captain Walpole then sent a f iend, Capt. Carlington, to take her to Paris, where he promised to meet her. At Paris Captain when she arrived there she found that he had no intention of meeting her. She then went to her brother in law's in Germany, where her child was born in June, 1883. Witness admitted by implication that when she heard of Captain Walpole's intended marriage she sent to Miss Corbin the follow. ing note: "I shall meet you one day and you will hear my curse to the end of your existence. This for marrying a man you have no right to marry." Captain Walpole will deny the promise and plead that if it was made it was in Turkey, where no action, is maintainable. He claims that the signet ring was stolen, and the letter which he wrote to his agent accusing her of theft is the basis for an action of libel which Captain Walpole will plead as privileged.

A Verdict ton the Defendant.

LONDON, Nov. 29. - The case of Valery Weidemann against Robert Horace Walgrole, the heir presumptive of the Earldon of Welford, for breach of promise, was continued to day. Hamilton Reminiscences of the Notorious Patent Medicine Fakir.

HAMILTON, Nov. 29. - The Spectator tonight says : Since the patent medicine fakir Doc. Tumblety got himself into prominence by being arrested in connection with the Whitechapel crimes numerous reminiscences of his sojourn in this country are coming to the front. During 1854 the doctor was in Hamilton selling patent medicine on the market. He used to ride about the streets, when not engaged in business, at a mad cap pace on a magnificent horse and was a prominent figure about town. The block below where held's eigar factory now is on King street east was at that time the Burlington hotel. John Smith, Dominion emigration agent, Dr. Chittenden and other prominent Hamiltonians were then young fellows boarding there, and Dr. Tumblety took up his abode there too. He hired the small brother of a big Irish chambermaid to assist him with his take medicine scances on the market. The boy would come up crying with toothache and the skilful doc. would instantaneously cure him before the gaping rustics. One night, however, Tumblely loaded the kid up with a wrong dose, which, instead of allaying the counterfest pain, gave him a very tangine pain in his little inside and threw him into convalsions. When Tumblety returned to the hotel the big Irish chambernaid sailed into him Marquis of Queensberry rules, gave him a black eve, badly disarranged his hair and made him such a lauguing-tock that he had to leave the city.
