majorities, though the opponents died hard. They never expected to defeat the by laws except by keeping the vote below the two-

But Kingstonians were true to them-

They did not endorse men who publicly stated that they had "no favor or affection for any railways."

The enemies of Kingston have been silenced, along with the papers of Belleville and Brock ville.

The screws on the brakes were not put down tight enough to stop the bounding Look at the vote:

The day was damp and disagreeable, but this did not retard the workers on both sides who hustled for all they were worth. The opponents of the by laws were vigorous, and while they never imagined that they could secure a majority of the votes they hoped for to keep two-fifths of the electors from expressing a verdict favourable to the by How the mighty have fallen !

At noon the outlook was anything but pleasant. The voters did not march up to the polls with as heavy a tread as was expected, and it seemed doubtful if the requir ed majority could be secured. But the promoters and backers of the measures were men who had been in battles before and who had faith in the electorate. So they worked the harder. Cabs and private conveyances dashed about the streets turning the muddy ways into liquid and covering coats and hats and rigs with the slimy compound. Harder work was never indulged in.

The hours were momentous It was a case of activity and advancement or decay and death to Kingston, but the energy and vitality of the people was made manifest and the city rises higher in public esteem and reputation.

Sharp at 5 o'clock the polls closed, even though there were electors clamouring for

The scrutineers got to work, knots of men stood about the booths discussing the events of the day, while hundreds moved towards the newspaper offices where the results were being bulletined. St. Lawrence and Ontario ward returns came in first, but the figures were not such as to inspire hope. A larger opposition was found than had been anticipated. Frontenac was soon to the fore, and, ing its votaries to the polls, the old time ward was true to itself and gave a majority that went a long way in strengthening the views of the promoters. Following came Rideau ward, and here the result was most surprising. It had been counted upon as the strongho d of the opposition, but it went the other way. The gun was loaded at the was kept up and the biggest vote in the city was polled from it. But instead of defeat. ing the measures it only increased the figures and put the people in a jubilant mood. Rideau warders had not been distrustful. The workingmen knew how their interests lay. Sydenham ward was the next to report and it only added enthusiasm to the excited crowd in the White office. It did the best of any ward in proportion to the total vote cast. Victoria ward made the figures convincingly in favour of the measures, and while Cataraqui ward returns were being awaited the crowd fell to betting on the final issue. The money that had been put up that the Napanee, Tamworth & Quebec RR. | whiskey. by law would be defeated was considered lost beyond peradventure. Finally the Cataraqui warders announced themselves and in a way that proved that some people had not control of the electorate as they sup posed. The final result was received with hearty cheers.

Kingston can now go ahead and prepare itself to entertain a proposition from the Grand Trunk railway company. But, meantime, hurrah for the new railway

The cabmen were busy yesterday. They would not object to an election of some sort every day in the year.

Ine vote in favour of the Napanee, Tamworth & Quebec RR. was four more than the number that carried the water works extension by law. The members of the railway committee of the city council are in fine glee. The work of two years has been endorsed, and further negotiations are unnecessary. There was a strong team at work in Victoria ward yesterday. Delays prevented all the electors from voting that wished to. Five were on hand when 5 o'clock came. When will the mayor and council take that proposed trip of theirs to Montreal to see Manager Hickson agent the Grand Trunk workshops? That is the question of the hour. The opposition can congratulate itself on having carried the by law. If their tactics had been less demonstrative possibly 120 less votes would have been polled for the

N. T. & Q. RR. by law. The opposition to the Napanee, Tamworth & Quebec railway was made up of about 150 votes. This will become very apparent when it is calculated that 210 persons voted against both railways and on general principles. The anti-railway feeling, was therefore, not at all what it was supposed to be. "The way I look at it," said a merchant last night, "is this: No matter if Rathbun does carry ore and lumber to Deseronto the money will be left along the Kingston & Pembroke RR. line and it will be spent in less, and who has cold hands and feet, can-Kingston. AN INDIAN WHO HAS BEEN WANT-ED FOR BURGLARIES.

the Cold Water in the Harbour-The Crimes that are Charged Against Him -Some Stolen Goods Found in the Skiffs He Towed. Chased by a steamer !

Chased by a Steamer and Grabbed From

A rollicking Indian in a blue shirt, came leisurely sailing down the lake this morning from Portsmouth.

He was an ex-convict and a burglar and the police had a mortgage on him. They saw an opportunity to secure the game and they hastened to pursue him.

And what a time they had ! It was a whole circus to see a steamer, on which a posse of police officers were station. ed, chasing after a perspiring and excited

And in the midst of the excitement the skiff upset, and the arrest of Louis Foster, alias Jackson, was made. The poor fellow was in a bewildered state. He isnow thawing himself out at the police station. But what are the facts of the case

On Octuber 3rd the Indian was released from the penitentiary, after serving a term for burgiarious entrances upon the property He seemed to have a penchant for suc

the same of the sa obtained than the police began to have petty burglaries in various parts of the city. The thing culminated in the affair at the house of James Adams, architect of the penitentiary. Some four weeks ago entrance was made into the house. Miss Adams was alarmed by the whisperings of voices, and then the opening of her bedroom door. raised an alarm and Mr. Adams jumped from bed, grasped a revolver, hastened to the hallway, and ran against the burglar who yelled "Hello!" and then knocked Mr. Adams to the floor. Before the architect could use his weapon the thief had fied. From all the circumstances Mr. Adams was convinced that the burglar was the released Indian, and he decided to aid the police and lay low for the fellow.

The police began to work on the case and soon learned that Foster did not go far away from the city when discharged. He had been seen in the harbor on several occasions, but the police had not been fortunate enough to secure him. Officer Small, before he knew that Foster had broken into Adams' house, found a man answering Foster's description rowing in a punt below Cataraqui bridge, accompanied by another man. Time rolled on and reports were received that the Indian was camped on Cedar Island. Two policemen went to that place the other day, but the Indian could not be found.

This morning a telephone message came to the police station from Architect Adams that Foster had left Portsmouth in a sail boat and was towing two skiffs behind. Officer Craig immediately rushed out of the police and sighted the Indian and the boats. He secured a skiff and started in pursuit. The steamer Pierrepont was at this time swinging out from the ferry wharf, on her way to the island. Sergeant Carson and Officer Small saw her and hurried to the dock. They arrived in time to get aboard, and informed Captain Allen of their mission.

By this time over three hundred people had congregated on the wharf to witness the capture. The Indian saw the steamer coming after him and let go the skiffs he had in tow, but he did not have time to carry out his plans. The steamer Pierrepont ran to the bow of the sail boat, to intercept the fellow, but the Indian jumped from this boat to the skiff next it, and then crawled over to the last skiff. His intention was undoubtedly to cut himself loose and row away.

Officer Small leaped from the steamer to the sail boat. The boats drifted down the paddle wheel. Capt. T. Donnelly then got in the second skiff, but he was surprised to see the Indian go out of the skiff he was in. It is not certain whether he jumped out or fell into the water accidentally. Captain Donnelly grabbed hold of him and pulled him out of the water. He was then assisted to the steamer by Small and Donnelly, and brought to the police station. The prisoner's boats were also towed to the

and strongly built. He has a heavy dark moustache and piercing eyes. He speaks good English, and manifests a great deal of innocence regarding the robberies he is supposed to be guilty of.

On being spoken to in the cells he said that he thought when he saw the steamer coming he was going to get towed. He did not know he was going to be arrested. He had been residing for three weeks on Cedar Island. It would be well if the police would search the spot, they might find other goods that Foster has stolen.

THE ST. ANDREW'S EVE

CITY HALL FILLED WITH A WARM. HEARTED AUDIENCE

A Gran' Auld Concert And a Nicht Wi Scotland - A Delightful Musical Programme-And of Good Music the Peeple Could Not Get Enough-Thirty-two

The concert of St. Andrew's society was well attended last evening, the city ball being filled, though the night was far from being favourable. The society had also it accustomed success in the popularity of the Buy one of those building lots on John with a bang of applause from the opening overture, a Scotch musical melange, of the fast improving Telgmann orchestra, to the hearty "Auld Lang Syne" of conclusion

The ladies Schubert quartette, of Boston fairly carried the feelings of the audien with them; they were enthusiastically called at each appearance. "Annie Laurie" produced "The Old Folks at Home," for that melody is imperishable : it "never will b missed" by any quartette or chorus company. "Reveries" delightfully sung with glee. "Willie's My Ain Laddie" and the selection from "Midsummer Night Dream." the latter especially, were most effective

ble encore with "Coming Thro' the Ras" given. Another encore was graciously by sponded to. Miss Anna L. Whitcombe we equally well received in her solo "Donglas Tender and True," and recalled rapturously. The quartette deserve all the praises spoken: its introduction here is a musical event. J. A. Robertson, of Boston, warmed the Scottish hearts with songs of olden time given with force and expression-"Sooth Wha Hae," "The Auld Scotch Songs" "We'ed Better Bide a Wee," and "McGre gor's Gathering," being twice encored. J H Cameron, of Toronto, was the choice w comedian for the evening and he had enough work cut out for him by way of allotments and encores to call forth his undoubted breadth of talent, and variety there was truly. "The Miser's Fate" was given with excellent dramatic effect, and succeeded encore by a capital representation of a boy essayist. The comic song "She Was" necessitated another comic song, as did her "Swinging in the Lane." "Rubenstein's Piano," though liked so well here as a spe cialty of Belford's, who does it inimitably was rapturously applauded and a double recall followed.

"The Silver Bell" selection of the Telemann orchestra was particularly well rendered; with Robert Baker's clarionet solo Robert Lake's trombone solo, and the accompaniments it made up with the opening overture a very presentable contribution for a local organization. The orchestra filled a much appreciated place. Then to the secretary, Captain Murray, many acknowledge ments are due for the energy with which he secured and arranged so good a programe, and with which he carried it to a very successful conclusion. The concert being so satisfactory, what of the audience? Well it was highly appreciative, well conducted, but thoughtless in the line of recalls. A programme of eighteen pieces was lengthened to one of thirty two; every vocal piece was encored and once only did a singer escape. In vain Mr. Cameron re appeared with watch in hand a it neared 11 o'clock; recalled he bowed and retired, and finally he yielded to fate and sang again. Looking back upon St. Andrew's, the Valda and McGibney concerts we fear Kingston is getting too ripe a reputation for demanding a double programme.
