Friday. Duc. 7th, and is a serving maid, young, rosy and fair to look upon. This fair girl was met by single kiss from her cherry lips. Like a teriog ex Place x starctly bopt his handand finally fixing his wondrous orbs upon Mr. Adams said; "What the gentleman opposite me has said is all true. It is true that the girl was very beautiful. And it is true that her lips were very tempting to me. The story of my failure to pick the cherries is also true so far as it goes, but the whole has not been told. I did offer the malden five francs for a kiss, but as I attempted to take it she sprang from my embrace and indignantly exclaimed: 'Do you think I am such a fool as to give you a kiss for five francs when I refused that old gentleman across the hall, who has offered me twenty francs with tears in his eyes?" The laugh was decidedly on Adams, who took the joke seriously to heart and would not speak to Clay for several days. At last Clay went to Adams and apologized, saying that he had been dumfounded by Adams' speech, which contained more truth than poetry.

Tom Corwin, of Ohio, was a ready man. John C. Calhoun once pointed to a drove of mules from Ohio and said to Corwin: "There go some of your constituents." "Yes," said Tom, "they are going down south to teach school." Governor Brough was once matched against Corwin, and in the midst of his speech said: "Gentlemen, my honored opponent himself, while he preaches advocacy of home industry, has a carriage at home which he got in England-had it shipped across the ocean to him. How is that for supporting home industry and labor?" When Corwin came on the stand he made a great show of embarrassment, stammered and began slowly: "Well, gentlemen, you have heard what my friend Mr. Brough has to say of my carriage. I plead guilty to the charges, and have only two things to say in my defense. The first is that the carriage came to me from an English ancestor as an heirloom, and I had to take it. Again, I have not used it for seven years, and it has been standing in my back yard all that time, and the chickens have converted it into a roost. Now, gentlemen," nothing further to say in my defense; but I would like to know how Brough knows anything about my carriage if he has not been visiting my chicken rogst."

There are many instances of bright passages at arms both between lawyers and the bench and bar. Not infrequently sharp lawyers have more than found their match in testy and obdurate witnesses. "There's brass enough in your face to make a kettle of," said a lawyer to a crusty old maid whose testimony he | best authors. was unable to break down. "And sap enough in your head to fill it," was all he got for his pains. After a protracted wrangle between a judge and a prominent counsel, the former said: "Well, sir, if you do not know how to conduct yourself as a gentleman I am sure I can't teach you." To which the lawyer simply replied, "That is so, my lord."

Judge Underwood, of Georgia, was a ready man engaged in trying a case. The judge, after charging decidedly against the defendant, locked the jury up for the night and adjourned court. After tea the judge and Underwood were walking on the piazza of the hotel, and hearing the noise of chairs and the movement of feet in the jury room, above the judge remarked, "I believe the jury have gone to prayers." "Yes," said Underwood, "I expect so; failing to get any light from your honor's charge, they are seeking it from above."

"I am going to visit the heathen," announced the preacher in his pulpit one Sunday. After the service the flock all gathered around, astonished at the turn affairs had taken, and querying when he would depart, and to what part of the benighted world he would go. "Oh, don't be disturbed, brethren and sisters; I'm not a-going to leave town."

Charles Sumner was once, at a dinner given in his honor at London, equal to the emergency. In the table talk he spoke of the ashes of some dead hero. "Ashes! What American English!"

rudely broke in an Englishman. "Dust you mean, Mr. Sumner. We don't burn our dead in this country."

"Yet," instantly retorted Mr. Sumner, with a courteous smile, "your poet Gray tells us that 'Even in our ashes live their wonted fire." Mr. Sumner escaped further criticism that evening.

Foote, the comedian, in the last century enjoyed a fine reputation for his ever ready replies. A gentleman praised the charms of a very plain woman. "Why don't you lay claim to such an accomplished beauty?" whispered Foote. "What right have I to her?" "Every right, by the law of nations, as the first discoverer."-St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Efficient, Mild and Efficient. In all diseases in which a purgative medicine is called for, Hamilton's Pills may be used with safety and satisfaction. They can be taken alike by the most delicate person or child or by the strong, as they contain neither minerals nor crude or deleterious substances; their use may be long continued without the possibility of salvation or any of the ill results so frequently attending the use of pills containing those substances. Hamilton's Pills are safe, sure and mild, yet prompt. Sold by druggists
