INDIANAPOLIS UNION DEPOT. From two-thirds of the towns in the state one may go to Indianapolis in the morning, do several hours' shopping or talking politics, and reach home by reasonable bed time. No other place is ever mentioned for political conventions; and even a religious, literary or educational gathering at any other place than Indianapolis is apt to be looked upon as "side show." Unlike most of the states, Indiana's capital is also her commercial metropolis; and though the Ohio gives her nearly 400 miles of boundary on a navigable | in your mind. river, it has not yet built up a great rival to Indianapolis, though Evansville is a good. | Sine's second. The structure is 100 feet wide and near 600 feet long, with fine lunch room, dining room, ticket offices, main railway offices, and all the other belongings of a first class union depot. The annexed cut presents the exterior view; and, as will be seen, it ranks among the finest depot buildings in the United States. The main waiting room is 120 feet long, with glass roof sixty feet above the floor. The cost, including the payment for the site, is set at $1,300,000, which is shared by the following roads: the Jeffersonville, Madison and Indianapolis; the Cleveland, Columbus, Cincinnati and Indianapolis; the Cincinnati, Indianapolis, St. Louis and Chicago; the Chicago, St. Louis and Pittsburg, and the Vandalia combination.

THE FATHER OF WATERS.

Visitors to Itasca Basin Correct the Old Maps.

Last fall two men, Messrs. J. V. Brown and W. A. Avery, left Saint Paul to explore the source of the Mississippi river. Mr. Brown has made some correction in the map laid down by Nicollet in 1836. Nicollet named three lakes as existing in the region, and selecting the largest feeder of ltaska lake, designated it the "Infant Mississippi. The stream rises in a small lake further up (1) on the map, and which is the true source of the Mississippi. The recent explorers report that Nicollet's third lake does not exist.

Of the three great branches of the main trunk of the Mississippi, extending from Cairo to New Orleans-the Ohio, the Upper Mississippi, and the Missouri-the Missouri is by far the largest, originating in British America some 500 miles from the Pacific Ocean. That branch which is called the Mis-

They report Nicollet's first lake (2) on the map to be filling up with the natural wash of a deep valley. The scenery is beautiful, and thousands of boiling springs are doubtless the source of its lakes, which are in turn the source of the river. It is not claimed by Mr. Brown that he has added to the original discoveries, except in correction. These discoveries were made long ago. William Morrison is supposed to have lived. at Itaska in 1803. Frequent visits have been made since, but to Schoolcraft and to Nicollet are due the credit of making the first maps ever laid down of this interesting region.

Gladstone's Secret of Health.

It is reported that Mr. Gladstone ascribes his splendid health and longevity, says The Sanitary Era, to having early learned the simple physiological lesson, namely, to make twenty-five bites at every bit of meat. Although the twenty-five bites might not make any impression on the meat in some cases, the interesting process of counting in every mouthful must be a species of rumination very diverting to the mind, and congenial to the statistical bent of the great treasury minister. For the purpose of mastication, however, shaving the meat off thin across the fiber with a sharp knife would be more effective and more favorable to sociability

WITHOUT STEAM OR SAIL

A Pneumatic Yacht That Is Expected to

But think of a yacht propelled without sail or steam!

That is the next thing on the programme. Such a vessel now I es at one of the docks in Brooklyn, N. Y. She is 100 Level long, with a beam of 12 feet and a draught of about 4 feet. She is called the Eureka, and is a "pneumatic yncht," She is a rakish looking craft, low down in the water, and looks very trim. The vessel is the result of fifteen months, experiment by Mr. John Secor. The vessel has been built for some time, and had several trial trips in 1887, but she was not quite satisfactory at that time. On her trial trips the flar ka required a dynamo and an engine to firmish electricity and an air pump to keep the cylinder supplied. Now the electricity is to be furnished by storage batteries, and the cylinders supply themselves with air automatically, so that the little ship can be cleared out fore and aft below deck, for her motive power will occupy less than three square feet of space in the stern. It is simple enough, consisting of two cylinders of steel 116 inches thick, 10 feet long and 20 inches in diameter at their outboard ends. They have no pitch to speak of, and the cons when out of water look like the muzzles of two heavy guns, one on each side of the sternpost. To insure easy steering, a space of about the same length as a propeller wheel would occupy is left between the sternpost and the rudderpost, the rudder being shipped on a shoe or extension of the keel.

At the inboard end of the cylinders are air chambers, into which a given amount of petroleum is to be conducted through leaden pipes from a tank, and by means of electrodes supplied by storage batteries and controlled by the engineer exploded at regular intervals in the cylinders. The compressed air rushing out continuously propels the yacht at a speed which, Mr. Secor declares, will be almost unlimited. At a pressure of 4,000 pounds he expects to drive the Eureka through the water at the rate of sixteen knots an hour.

There is also being perfected at one of the Brooklyn docks a hydraulic vessel that is expected to go at the rate of thirty iniles an hour. Conservative engineers say that it is impossible, but the inventor is confident of

OH! DR. TUMBLETY.

He Was Charged with Being the Whitechapel Fiend-Where Is He Now?

Dr. Tumblety, the American who was suspected of being the Whitechand nurderer and arrested in London not being ago, but soon after released, is a man with a singular history. Between 1860 and 1914 he was as well known on the streets of Brooklyn, where he posed as an Indian herb doctor, as he subsequently was in the correct roof the Fifth Avenue botel, where he paraded as an Englishman of wealth and a physician of marked pretensions.

Oddly enough, his companion when in Brooklyn was young Harold, who was implicated in the assassination of

Abraham Lincola,

and who formed

one of the quartet

that suits quently

where he sold berbs for removing pimples from the face. Harold-who was a pale faced, large DR. TUMBLETY. eyed, poetical looking boy-was with Tumblety constantly. He seemed a compromise between friend, companion and servant to the doctor. Tumblety had a large following in Brooklyn at this time, but played himself out after a time, and went across the river to New York. He always made a good living-how, aside from his quack therb business, no one could tell. He was at this time a curious looking man.

He was about six feet four inches in height, and was an extremely well built though homely featured man. His face was very red, and his mustache dyed a jet black. Sometimes he rode, but generally he strode through the streets attended by a huge mastiff. He disappeared from public view after be had achieved great notoriety when he was suspected of complicity in the scheme to introduce yellow fever, by means of infected clothing, during the war, into New York city. Not long before the assassination of President Garfield he was often seen at the Fifth Avenue hotel with Charles Guiteau. Little has been heard of him of late years. He has a cunning felicity for achieving world wide notoriety by getting into apparent scrapes, but he always comes through his scrapes unscathed, unharmed. His notoriety in connection with the Whitechapel horrors is but another instance of this.

What Good Teeth Mean.

Good teeth mean, to a certain extent, good digestion, and consequently good health, while bad teeth often mean the contrary. Too ma: people force the stomach to do the work that the teeth should have done, and the much abused, long suffering stomach rebels at this new function thrust upon it, and the most dangerous results follow as natural consequence.—Herald of Health.
