A Ball Room Tragedy.

The story we are about to relate happened out of print at the time out of consideration | easy to take. for the young lady, who has since left the

It was at a ball. Among the persons present was a young lady who had a great horror of snakes, and imagined-no matter what the reason-if she experienced any unusual alarm, a snake in unpleasant proximity. After dancing a while she was greatly disturbed by feeling a sensation as though a serpent had fixed itself beneath the folds of her dress.

Grasping the head of the monster tightly, she screamed aloud for assistance A hasty consultation among the gamest of the ladies was held, when it was decided that a young disciple of Esculapius who was present should be called to their assistance. He was quickly on the spot, and, being a young man of uncommon courage, was not many moments within the circle of half fainting females before he had caught the tail of the snake and wound it firmly around his hand, telling Miss M. that she must let go the moment he jerked, and to make the act as instantaneous as possible.

He told her he would pronounce the words one, two, three, and that at the last word she must let go her hold, and that he doubted not that he could withdraw the snake before could have time to strike.

All stood in breathless horror awaiting the act of life or death, and the moment the words were pronounced the young fellow jerked out the longest and most diabolical looking wire bustle that ever was seen.

The whole affair was soon explained. The fastening of the machine had become loose during the dancing, and it had shifted its position in such a manner that it dangled about and induced the wearer believe that it was a snake with an enormous head. The fellow swooned in his tracks, and couldn't be induced to attempt the capture of another snake under any circumstances. The young lady left the ballroom greatly mortified .-Palatka (Fla.) Herald.

Timing Horses by Clockwork.

The chronograph clock, tried at the Coney Island meeting, should be adopted by all racing associations. The dial of the clock. which shows the minutes and the one-fifth seconds, has a diameter of thirty inches, thereby allowing divisions of time to be seen at a great distance. The chronograph gearing is made on the bevel wheel principle, similar to the one used in the Waltham watch chronograph, thereby making a perfect instrument. The minute hand and the one-fifth second hand are started, stopped and returned to 12 through an electrical appliance, either from the judges' stand or from any part of the track. Should the horses start from a point distant from the judges' stand the bands are started by an electric button near the starter and stopped by another button behind the wire on the judges' stand.

As many buttons as necessary can be placed on the track, and any one or all of the three operations can be made from any of the buttons. The starting and stopping of the hands | cine it contains.
