THE OLD YEAR DIES.

eads over the summit where the sunbeams And thus in light and shade and gloom, Sorrow and joy this life-path leads along. J. A. GARFIELD.

With the close of this day the old year But its memories live, and as they are of good or of evil they will pleasantly or nnpleasantly affect the future. The chronicles of a twelve month end to-night, and before the book is shut and sealed and placed away among time's unalterable records we turn over its leaves and scan its contents. What reflections they give rise to! What sighs they evoke! What lessons they teach A thousand memories are awakened to enthuse, delight and electrify, or to dampen, discourage and depress. The past we live tended to uplift us spiritually, to ennoble our lives, to turn our advantages to good account, to make the world somewhat better than we found it. We pass over the entries of promises broken, of opportunities neglected, of obligations undischarged, of resolves ignored. The feelings alternate as the not sit down and sob out his anguish as the old year dies must live free of self-reproach.

Of our city during 1888 we have arousing their public ventures has been distinctively progressive. The schemes inaugurated by our civic government, and having for their object the enlargement of our municipal boundaries and the increase of our population, have been carried along with unabated vigour. The works designed to add to Kingston's importance and business prosperity and growth and healthiness have had the hearty endorsement of the ratepayers. On every hand we see evidences of advance ment, and 1888 will be remembered as the year in which the city's new era was most manifestly developed. In a public sense all has been life and animation and thrift. In a private sense there have been the usual sorrowful incidents. A few familiar faces have disappeared—a few of those whose days were remarked by generous kindly acts, who lived for those who loved them and the good that they could do-have disappeared. They have been removed from the city of the living to the city of the dead, and the memories they leave are sweet as the fragrance of the new-blown flower. Of Canada what has been her position during the year? One of peace and prosperity. The people in all the dominion have been submissive to constituted authority, have been obedient to the dictates of governments though sometimes questioning the wisdom of them. The friction between the local and federal powers has of course been made very marked, but not more so than in some previous years. The intensity of party spirit is responsible for what political disagreements have arisen, and it is a matter for congratulation that the points upon which the governments have in past disagreed are being gradually disposed of. By-and-bye the functions of each and the powers of each will have been so clearly defined that there can be no differences in regard to them. Canada as a nation continues to develop in population, in material wealth, in loyalty to the crown and yet in national independence. The year 1888 will be looked back to as the one in which the fair maiden (as the dominion is often represented to be) has not been THE UNDERSIGNED HAS BEEN IN. influenced by the wooings or bluster of an STUCTED by Mr. Francis Tracey, to sell on the premises, King street, near Princess, elderly neighbour. The history of the fishery dispute, of the retaliation policy, of the annexation movement is the history of Canadian persistency in the pursuit of a right course, of Canadian courage and candour, and of Canadian indifference to Yankee insolence. The record of the political period which is now at a close is calculated to make Canadians more devoted to their country. more determined to assist in the working out of its manifest destiny.

In respect of the mother country 1888 will have associated with it many significant events. Great Britain remains the centre of light and liberty, the controlling political power in continental Europe, the source of mili tary strength that is felt the world over. With interests diverse and far-reaching it is not surprising that her arms should be so frequently used in the establishment civilization. The year has been attended by its wars. The army has had to fight in defence of British rights and British liberty, and it has won its victories. The year closes with the dealing of another hard blow in the name of freedom, and Arab and African BARRISTERS, SOLICITORS, &c., 192 Ontario | fall back defeated. The flag that has braved a thousand years the battle and the breeze is the symbol of righteous rule, gand where.

ever it flies the people are guaranteed the fullest measure of civil and religious liberty.

Feeling in the United States is calmer since the presidental election. The people submit readily to the great electoral shocks to which they are so repeatedly subjected, and they as readily recover from the effects of the same. Towards Canadians they are not unfriendly. Some political fanatics, no purpose. The great common sense of the people of the United States is against the adoption of any policy that will bring the political interests of the two countries into violent collision.

In the world at large a spirit of peace and enlightenment is at work. Into the dark places of earth courageous and brave men have penetrated, and during 1888 a great deal has been done in the way of discovery and development. The people everywhere have grown in knowledge, in usefulness, in power. The year has added immesureably to man's achievements. In the constituency served by the WHIG changes have occurred, but the days have come and the days have gone, and it has made its daily visit, and brought intelligence and interest and information to its readers. The retations between the Whig and its patrons have indeed been very pleasant. We hope they will long continue so, that to each one will wish many returns of the season.

WHO IS IT CSUSHING?

The Canadian Gazette, the subsidized organ of the Canadian government in London is, in discussing imperial federation, very severe on some one, "The colonists are not," it says, "such weak, miserable bantlings that they need anxious coaching in a great idea. They only ask for the all over again. We recall the acts that have | hearty sympathy and practical co-operation of the Motherland in their struggies to manhood, and it ill becomes us to give utterance to gloomy reflections upon their loyalty, and upon the possibility of their leaving the empire in the lurch when the great task of the British race is only half accomplished. Lather let the dispiriting task be given up, fore us in panoramic form. They leave an our hand, believing that in so doing we shall imperishable impression. These memories | best maintain all that is worthy of maincan never be obliterated, and he who would | tenance in the grandeur and integrity of the empire." Who is our contemporary snubbing ? In Canada Sir John Macdonald, Dalton McCarthy, or who? In motherland, recollections. The year has been to it a Lord Roseberry, the Marquis of Lorne, or notable one. The activity begun before its | who? What is the idea of seeking to choke entry was continued throughout it. The off the federation agitation at this particular spirit of our people in connection with all juncture? Has the tory party changed front in regard to it? Has the boom in its favour spent its force? And what is the Gazette so saucy about anyway ?

Dedicated to Alice.

FOR THE WHIG. I'm thinking of thee, Alice, as you wandered With your lovely smiling face, and your heart as pure as snow. A beauteous modest maidend; eath claimed you Love's tender light beamed from thine eyes, theu wert thy father's pride.

How oft you watched with pleasure true, for sails on Huron's breast, How oft you picked up sea shells, which its playful wave s caressed : How oft you picked the flowerets, which on every hillside bloom.

And now thou'rt lying. Alice, in the cold and silent tomb.

But not alone dear Alice, thou art with thy mother dear, In the throne above the skies where no parting Thou art happy now, dear Alice, nor crown, nor golden store

Could tempt thee to thy home again, by Huron's lovely shore. ELOISE A. SKINNINGS. Goderich, Dec., 1883.

Cruel Treatment of an Heiress.

MONTREAL, Dec. 31.-A broker named W. A. Lloyd two years ago met the handsome daughter of a French Canadian merchant and married her. She was an heiress of $40,000, and in a very short time he went through her money. Since then he has neglected his wife. When he does see her he beats and ill-treats her. He was convicted of vagrancy, and sentence was suspended with the warning that if he continued to beat his wife he would be sent to gaol.

Forgery in Montreal.

MONTREAL, Dec. 31.-Friday a note for $700 was due at the Bank of Montreal. The manager, suspecting forgery, communicated with the Canada dye and chemical works. McIntosh, clerk, rushed to the bank and took up the note. Warrants were then issued against him and Alex. Allen. McIntosh is remanded to jail and the police are searching for Allan.

He Will Not Interfere.

CHICAGO, Dec. 31. - Master-in-Chancery Hindes, to whom was referred the anarchist petition for an injunction restraining police from interferring with their meetings, rendered his decision to day.
