> HUSH. can scarcely hear) she murmured.

For my beart beats loud and fast, But surely in the far, far distance can hear a song at last.

As they carry home their absaves : And the evening breeze has risen. And rustles the dying leaves.

Listen ! there are voices talking Calmiy still she atrove to speak;
Yet her voice grew faint and trembling.
And the red flushed in her check—
It is only the children playing
Below, now their work is done.

And they laugh and their eyes ar dassled By the rays of the setting ann.

Fainter grew their voices, and weaker, As with anxious eyes she cried, Down the avenue of chestputs I can bear a horseman ride.

It was on y the door that were freding In a herd on the clover grass, They were startled and fl d to the thicket, As they saw the reapers pass

Now the night arose in silence. Birds lay in their leafy nests. And the deer cronched in the turest. And the children were at rest.

From watchers around a bed But rest to a weary spirit. Peace to the quiet dead

There was only a sound of weepto,

"Chubb's Corner-the home of the curbstone broker, and the place where more gossip bas been talked during the last forty years than would furnish the stock-in-trade of forty well-organized sewing circles -was an early victim, for it went down with Furlong's palace about the hour of six. The mention of Chubb's Corner awakens a thousand memories. For many years it enjoyed the distinction of being the great centre of commercial speculation. Men came here to meet men who had money to lend, and those who had none came to borrow it. Stocks and merchandise changed hands on this spot a dozen times a day, and the cautious bill-broker, who never had any funds of his own to lend, came here to scent the tinancial air. In this cheerful spot n.oney was subject to the fluctuations of the market with a vengeance. The rate -- ave. there's the rub- "if we can only agree about that," said the note shaver, "I think I may take the paper." "The man is a good man," he continued, unconsciously quoting Shakspeare, "and I think I may take bus bond," and though nothing was said about the pound of flesh in the event of the notes not being paid at maturity, the modern Shylock meant it all the same, and was as equally determined to get it, too, as the old gentleman we see on the stage rubbing his hands together and making horrible faces at the audience and the merchant Antonio. Therate in this grim corner was not measured by the conscience of the money lenders, but by the necessities of the applicant. One could tell in a much less expensive way than by borrowing money of these gentry, whether they were get ting a good price for their coin or not. by simply watching their faces during the operation. The face of the noteshaver is a barometer. It requires no regulating and it is always correct. There, quick, wetch it now. See how long the face is. No, he has no money himself, but Ab, that's it, now watch. See, observe the countenance, listen to that chuckle ' Yes, what is he chuckling about? Oh, that's nothing, only habit; now the face is hanging up again, and it is ready for observation. The lender is telling the borrower how difficult it is to get money, and how much South had to pay for a thirty days' loan yesterday. This is of no interest to Jones, who is hanging on the words of Mr. Shylock as a lover drinks in the soft nothings of his mistress, but it gives the lender oppor tunities to find out how 'hard up' his victin is. Now watch his face again. Still long and billious-looking. Twenty per cent, is not too high. It's only five dollars on a hundred, and look at the time, three months-and falls due on Sunday too, You will get a day's interest out of me for nothing, you rogue. The face is positively joyous. The eyes spap and sparkle The countenance has become quite round and full, and there are bright spots on the cheeks. The extra day without interest did it, and the two go off arm in arm. But after all they are not happy one has paid 100 much, and the other stands ready to kick himself for not ask ing more. O, Chubb's Corner, you have much to answer for, and perhaps the tire did some good in ataying this kind of business for a time at least on your site. But the old Corner was not given over entirely to the vultures of commerce. It was the place for many years where pro perty, stocks, debentures, bonds, and all such securities were sold at public auc tion as well as by private sale. The old Corner was a meeting place too, where men met and talked over the times and their affairs. Men stopped here on their way to the Post office, the old bank and the Custom House, if it was not too late, to have a friendly chat with an acquaint ance. Office boys hurrying along in the leisurely hurry that office boys always em ploy, stopped at Chubb's Corner and looked into the windows of the Exchange office, and wondered to themselves if the hugh pile of money they saw lying about was good or not, and whether it would pass. And so the days came and the days passed away, and year in and yea: out the old Corner still stood the centre of a busy hive. If those old walls could speak now, as daily men tramp over their tall forms, what tales could they tell, what stories of joy and sorrow might they not relate. Walls have ears and they heard much, but they could not speak, and what they knew has perished with them."- From Geo. Stewart's "Story of the Great Fire in St. John. -The Irish Canadian pilgrims departed from New York this morning at nine o'clock by N.Y.C. Road for Montreal. During their stay in New York they visited all the points of interest and were hospitably entertained by their many
