TUESDAY EVEN'G, AUG. 21, 1877. TIES AND GARTERS

I bought a box of ties one day— Silken ties, of various hnes— And on my dressing case they lay, Convenient for my daily use.

In summer-time I like to wear Around my neck a narrow band It gives me quite a youthful air—
If fastened by my lady's hand. One morn, while looking o'er my ties In search of a peculiar shade,

I found, somewhat to my surprise. That two were stolen or mislaid Perhaps, I thought, my lady's maid Has taken them to give her bean;

And so when she was nigh, I said, wonder where my neck ties go!

She took the hint, and toward her head I haven't them; and then she shook Her feather duster, while she said Aearer at home you'd better look

Then blusbing, laughing, tripped away, And left me in a thoughtful mood; But what she meant I could not say. Nor whether it were ill or good. But ere I passed my lady's door.
I paused, tapped entered, and—we kissed

Then saw upon the chamber floor. The dainty ties that I had missed Beside a pair of 'broidered hose, In sweet disorder did they lay, Frosh and unsullied as a rose—

Both bose and ties of pearly gray. So what we wear around my threat My wife wears round her, limbs that dance We both on ties and and gaiters date:

But Honi suit qui mal y peuse. A Serious Riot in Japan.

The Japan Gazette says: "A serious fracas occurred yesterday evening (May 27) in Homura, between some British and Russian men-of-war's men. Ite appears that some dozen Russians were in the Union saloon, when a couple of British sailors entered. Some conversation took place about the present war between Turkey and Russia, the upshot of which was that one of the two men had a tumbler thrown at his head, striking and cutting him on the forehead, and toth he sad his companion were speedily ejected from the house, but the fight went on outside. Some more British seamen, and marines appearing on the spot, the Russians retreated into the house, and it was thought the fight was ended. Unfortunately an English seaman was walking where the Russians were located, and was attacked by five or six men. His comrades rallied, and an indiscriminate fight took place. Again there was a lull. and residents in the neighborhood hoped the melee had finally ended. But in a few moments about 40 Russians appeared on the scene, armed with staves and stones. Catching an unfortunate marine by himself, they at once set upon him. He was a tall, powerful man, and succeed . ed in knocking down several of his assailauts with the buckle end of his belt, but was eventually knocked down himself. The fight had now become general, for the Russians attacked all who came in their way, seamen or civilians. Three Frenchmen who were standing at the corner of the Cafe de l'Univers were knocked down; several civilians were attacked with sticks and stones. The police had by this time appeared on the scene, were severely handled by the Russians. A civilian passing by and observing a Russian sailor about to strike a British marine with a large club, attempted to wrest the weapon away, but got knocked down. Another bystander saw a Russian with a drawn knife rushing madly at an Englishman to plunge it in his breast, rades severely hurt, seen returned on board. The affair caused quite a commotion in the settlement, and the various Consuls appeared on the apot as quickly as possible. One Russian found lying in the road was put in a jinrikisha and con-to the hospital.'

When it is considered that the unfortunate girl has not full control of her mental faculties, the outrage perpetrated upon her is all the more fiendish and inhuman.
