A few days since the Mail had a very censible article denouncing the tyranny of Trades Unions, which arbitarily stipulate how many or how few boys shall be permitted to learn a useful trade here or in the adjoining country. The proportion of one apprentice to seven journey men is, we are told, the usual proportion permitted, but in Pennsylvania this rule has been stretched to such an extent against the poor boys that only one is allowed to every twenty-five men, even domestic servants being as a result seven times more numerous than the apprentices. It is certainly delightful to see the Tory organs thus dencuncing a system of ostracism and monopoly and advocating Free Trade in the case. They seem to be doing so, however, in refreshing innocence of the fact that they are only combatting another form of their own pet system of protection. The principles of monopoly and restriction, of undue and unfair interference of the rights of others to compass selfish ends them that it would be retaliated. His and greater firmness in Bank stocks are present in every development of the theory of protection, and the particular form of it above condemned is just as legitimate as that which the lory organs are daily advocating.

The hospitalities of Paris are soon to for the event, largely shared in, of course, by the American colony in that gay capi tal. Grant will be greeted by a demon stration which may be more demonstrative than anything he has seen in England; but his reception will not be s whit more honest and hearty for all that. In this case there will be the interesting feature of one Republic greeting another, war med by the recollection that the countries have always been friends and allies. Not only this, but there are many constitutional points of similarity between the nations, which will inspire a fellow feeling. In each country the President has been chosen by and represents the minority of the people; in each the government of the day possesses powers and bears sway with a vested despotism which is nowhere known to the responsible government of constitutional menarchies; while in each no doubt the majority is working and hoping for the emancipation of a larger freedom for themselves. Under all the circumstances the interchange of cordialities between Grant and McMabon may be expected to be particularly hearty and appropriate.
