TEN YEARS.

Ten little years ago, dear love. Ten little years, no more, That happy morning came, like which
None ever dawned before;
That blessed morning when the earth
Wore all her gladdest charms;
That morning when the heavens came down And clasped us in its arms.

That morning when upon her hand, Your hands so white and small, Frail bond, if that were all. Some words, I know, were said, a vow Was given, a prayer, a kiss. And through and over all a strange Confused sense of bliss.

They have been happy years,
Happy and glad and true;
I will not think what life hed been To me unblessed by you;
And every day I bless that day
Whose tender, reseate glow
Has never faded yet, dear wife,
Full well we both do know.

Twas not the words the person said. That made us one; the years, With all their many joys. Their triumphs, losses, tears— The years, with all they have denied, And all that they have given Of good and ill—the little one Waiting for us in heaven.

Have all been life's true ministers, And helped to make us one; So may it be until the end— Till all our work is done Then, in the perfect summer land, The love begun in this Shall gloom forever on see high
