A FINE PORTRAIT.-The proprietors of the "Atlantic Monthly" published two years ago a crayon portrait of Longfellow, and last year one of Bryant, and furnished them to the subscribers to their magazine. They have this year added to their list a similiar portrait of Whittier, done by the same artist, Mr. J. E. Baker, in the highest style of the art. These distinguished writers have been intimately connected with the "Atlantic" from its start, and many of their best productions have first appeared in its pages. This is particularly true of Whittier, and, if for no other reason, his likeness will be very acceptable to the readers of the magazine. In December next Mr. Whittier reaches his seventieth
