Daily British Whig
MONDAY EVENG, DEC. 24, 1877.

A CHRISTMAS PRAYER.
Christ child, in thy journeyings over
This dull world of ours;
Let thy blessings freely pour;
In full and grateful showers,
Where the tale of want and woe,
Or grief dwells in deep woe,
A breath of human woe.

Into the lonely cell,
Where grief is ever night,
Where many a poor and wretched dwells,
Oh, throw a ray of light—
A ray of precious, precious light,
Responsive to our true,
And send thy ray of tongue of light,
A light to our true woe.

Give to the drunkard a weeping wife,
Her darling, just as when
She looked on her dear life,
He was so noble then.
Give to the famished such a feast,
Responsive to our true,
And let them know one day, at least,
How Christmas plenty comes.

Sons are wandering far and wide,
And mother's bark in vain,
They weep and wail and cry,
Daughters have found their bright eyes
Responsive to our true,
And fathers wail in anguish,
If they knew where to go.

Parted by fall, air, or pride,
Yet suffering all the more,
Each with a heart full of sorrow,
Christ child, do thou restore
Children weep in deep despair,
Give them again the tender care,
They knew and loved of old.

There are so many little boys,
So much of human woe,
So many in our streets and ways,
That we can never know
Christ child, intercede, friend,
Thine own compassion show,
And with thine earthly mercies blend
The bliss the pardoned know.

ON CHRISTMAS EVE.
They were married on Christmas Eve
It was a genuine love match, George Dardanel was young and handsome, with dark, magnetic eyes, and his wife, Rose, was a golden tressed blonde beauty, with a slight, supple figure, and one of those superb contralto voices that turn the slightest utterance into melody. The most natural thing in the world, people said—the handsomest couple in the mouth, Dardanel was not rich, but his legal practice was a slowly and surely extending, and they lived happily
