But Cora Leslie was not poetic, not if she knew herself. She had not been two minutes in the car before she, without seeming to look at any one, had noted the womens' costumes and duly credited sage advice. She proved to have a delicious laugh, which inspired her hearer to join in its merriment. As they walked on, Morton's ideas of the American girl in the abstract became highly appreciathem as from an artiste, a little dress-maker, or home made.
