He stood the 'pain bravely for three days, refusing all 'foreign devil medicine,' and on the fourth sent for a native physician. The latter duly arrived and began preparations for treatment of the malady which he announced to be due to the presence of a 'darting snake' in the sufferer's body. Incense sticks were lighted and placed just outside the door, and also in the room. A pack of firecrackers was set off and a talismanle paper pasted to the wall. This was done to drive away evil spirits and attract good ones. The doctor next wrote a lot of characters on a thick piece of paper with a vermillion pencil and set fire to it. A Test of Love. The tale is told in the Orient: A lady one day found a man following her, and she asked him why he did so. His reply was, "You are very beautiful, and I am in love with you" "Oh, you think me beautiful, do you? There is my sister over there. You will find her much more beautiful than I am. Go and make love to her." On hearing this the man went to see the sister, but found she was very ugly, so he came back in an angry mood and asked the lady why she had told him a falsehood. She then answered, "Why did you tell me a falsehood?" The man was surprised at this accusation and asked missin French Swindlers Who Found Many Dupes Among the Paristans. It is a well established face that many people who would not be swindled by any her confidence game will allow themselves to be beguiled of their saving by a tale of buried treasure. The latest exlay. The accused swindlers were Pedro sequet, olive of skin and black of hair, and suard Antoine, who was pale and red-

A TALE OF BURIED TREASURE

Their modus operandi was beautiful in its simplifiery and results. They would send him from some town in Spain a cloverly worded letter about a mosterious box containing 850,000 france buried for to Paris of the daughter and a servant. The daughter would bring with her the, plans and explanations necessary to recovor the treasure. For his reward the tradesman would be promised a third of

The tradesman to most cases would reply that he did not know the writer, which brought forth a second letter, saying that the "Spanish prisoner of state" lived for some time in the same street with him at Paris and was a regular customer. He would further explain that he had been | their homes there. The committee have munitions of war in France, and, hearing of his intended arrest, had hidden the treasure. The second letter would say: "Take the Bastile-Charenton tramway and get off a little before you reach Charenton. Follow the right-hand sidewalk and you will see six benches. It is between the fifth and sixth benches that the money is hidden. There are trees and stones by which I can indicate more exactly the spot. Twelve hundred france is the sumwhich will be necessary to take my daughter from her pension."

If the 1,200 francs was sent the dupe would receive a third letter, demanding two or three thousand france more under various pretexts, a favorite one being an additional bill of the directress of the boarding school, written on a finely fithegraphed letter-head and signed "La Directrice Dolores de las Navas." The game would keed on until the victim's funds

The swindlers were caught because they had chosen Perpignan as the post-office when Barcelona grew too warm for them. There were half a score of witnesser against the swindlers, who had lost all the way from 700 to 6,400 francs. One of them, Mme. Bouglet, after having sent all her money, received a letter saying that the tale of buried treasure was an invention, and that she had better say nothing if she did not wish to be laughed at. Others had spent hours waiting for trains which should bring them the orphaned Henriette, who would wear a black dress and carry a white handkerchief. The swindlers were fined 3,000 france and sentenced to five years in prison, and the judgment was ordered printed in ten Parisian and twenty provincial journals, the judge adding that he had hoped there would be fewer fools in consequence.
