HONOR TO KINGSTON'S SON.

THE MONUMENT REARED TO THE STATESMAN'S MEMORY.

A Sketch of the Statue—The Address Delivered by the Chairman—The Monument Handed Over to the City and Accepted by Mayor Wright.

The monument, which is an imposing one, stands at the main entrance to the city park, facing citywards. On each side stands, keeping grim and silent sentry, one of the "Tawny guns of the Malakoff," taken by the British troops in Sebastopol when that stronghold fell in 1856. The statue is a magnificent work by G. Wade, of London, England, and represents Sir John in the uniform of a privy councillor. It is of massive bronze, eleven feet in height, and weighs two and one-half tons. It is undoubtedly very faithful as a characteristic likeness, which, as the sculptor had not the assistance of life studies in his work, reflects the greatest credit upon him. It possesses that delicate greenish bloom, resembling the verde antique of the celebrated ancient statues of Rome. Those who have seen the ancient bronzes in the British museum cannot fail to notice the dark greenish bloom on their surface—which is the result, probably, of the action of the atmosphere on the metal during a long series of years—and it is this peculiarly beautiful tint that the modern sculptors endeavor to imitate, and in which the French admittedly excel. The original model in the studio of Sculptor Wade was inspected by the Baroness Macdonald and Sir Charles Tupper, and received, we are told, their cordial approval. It is a replica of the statue erected in Montreal. Mr. Wade is the sculptor of the bust of Sir John A. Macdonald, which was some time ago placed in St. Paul's cathedral.

The pedestal, which is from the design of E. R. Welch & Son, of this city, is in admirable keeping with the elegant statue which surmounts it. It is twelve feet each way at the base, and is fifteen and one-half feet in height. Its weight is thirty-seven tons, or 74,000 pounds, and it is made of a fine, rose-colored granite, obtained from the celebrated quarries of Milne, Coutts & Co., St. George, N.B. Welch & Son's design was successful in competition with forty-four others, submitted by the most prominent architects of Toronto and Montreal. On the face of the base appears the word "Macdonald" in raised highly polished letters, and immediately above, upon a beautifully polished plinth, are the now historic words of the statesman, uttered shortly before his death: "A British subject I was born, a British subject I will die." At each corner of the base is a pointed pillar, of granite, also polished, and on the face of that on the left hand is the date—1815—of the old chieftain's birth; on that on the right hand the date—1891—of his death. The column which stands upon the base is highly polished, and the height from the foundation to the feet of the statue is fifteen feet five inches, the added height of the figure making the total height of the monument twenty-six feet five inches. The whole is a monumental work of art, of which Kingston may well be proud.

John Gaskin's Address.

We are assembled to-day to do honour to the memory of Canada's greatest statesman, and Kingston's most distinguished citizen. The occasion will go down in history as one of the most important events that has transpired in this province. The great multitude present indicates beyond a doubt that party politics are lost sight of for the moment, and that all citizens, irrespective of class or creed, are joining hands in an effort to fittingly honor the memory of the late premier, Sir John A. Macdonald. Such was the desire of the committee. I am glad to say their desire is fully realized. Deceased, one might say, was a native of Kingston, having come to the city with his parents when a mere boy. Here he was educated and here he entered public life, first as an alderman, in 1843, for number four ward, now Cataraqui. He remained in the council for four years. There are many gentlemen present who remember him as an alderman. His ability, however, soon attracted attention, and when quite a young man, he was still more highly honored by the citizens of Kingston, who sent him to represent them in parliament. That he soon became Canada's first minister we all know. Although his duties were onerous and required that his attention be given to all parts of the dominion, he never lost sight of his constituency. Kingston and Kingstonians occupied the warmest spot in his heart. No matter how closely engaged at Ottawa, at what time appealed to, or what the nature of the requested interview might be, he was pleased to receive and hear Kingstonians. His office door was always "on the latch" for them. Invariably, and even in the midst of state business, he enquired about friends of his youth. Of Kingston he always spoke as home, and his desire, when near the close of life, was to be laid at rest in this dear old city. No wonder, then, that we should be enthusiastic in doing honor to the departed statesman. This large gathering shows that the affection felt by Sir John Macdonald for Kingston and its people found a true and ready response in the hearts of our citizens. He did not forget his duty towards them, in proof of which we have many evidences, and to-day's proceedings show that we have not forgotten our duty towards him.

Kingston has produced three statesmen who stand out prominently among famous Canadians, namely, Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Alexander Campbell and Sir Oliver Mowat. All three have done noble service for Canada, and the charge of disloyalty or of being unpatriotic to the interest of the British empire, cannot be made against any one of them. What an honor to Kingston to have! Under such circumstances I think I am safe in saying that while this is the first monument of the kind erected here, it will not be the last. Nothing tends more to form a strong, national sentiment in a country than the raising of statues of our patriots. We should make permanent the memory of all Canadian statesmen who were loyal to Canada and British connection, no matter what their politics were, at what altar they worshipped, or what tongue they spoke.

Another Kingston Boy Speaks.

As a Kingstonian who had done credit to the country Lieut.-Gov. Kirkpatrick was the recipient of a very hearty welcome when he advanced to the front to address the assemblage. He began by disclaiming any intention of making a speech, and went on to congratulate those in charge of the demonstration upon the complete success they had achieved. The response of all the citizens of Kingston had shown the respect in which they held the memory of the great statesman. The statue was a faithful representation of Kingston's old member, and was one of the best of the statues which had been unveiled in the dominion. It would carry down to succeeding generations his face and form, as he was familiarly known to most of them. For fifty years his name had been a household name in Canada, and for thirty years he had guided the ship of state, proving himself a skilful pilot, whether the waves of political life ran high or not. There were many perplexing questions before the country in the period from 1841 to 1854; the country was agitated with the most burning questions, threatening disruption and discord in the most ominous manner. These questions were the secularization of the clergy reserves and the abolition of the seignorial tenures; the first a question with just enough of the religious element in it to give all the bitterness of polemical controversy to the strife. People now have no idea of the bitterness of those days, his honor observed, of the rancor and animosity of the speeches of the public men and newspaper articles of that day. Government after government was formed to settle these questions and fell without having been successful, until in 1854 Sir John Macdonald became attorney-general and one of the chiefs of an administration which settled the vexed questions to the satisfaction of the people. Then in succeeding years came the confederation of which they were all so proud, and which settled so many questions. After it came the danger of war over the Alabama claims and the fisheries question, and Sir John Macdonald was one of the British commissioners

G. A. KIRKPATRICK.

Washington, and any one who had seen his letters at that time had seen how perplexed he had been between his desire to serve Canada and the pressure put upon him by his imperial colleagues to give up to the United States. Single handed he had fought against both the imperial and the American commissioners, and had got the imperial government to back him up, so that it ended satisfactorily in the ratification of the treaty of Washington. He could remind them how Sir John had lived here in Kingston, his honor concluded, how they all knew him well, how he was loved alike by rich and poor in the city, how all were glad to shake him by the hand. Kingston had been honored by having him for its representative, and now political friend and foe alike were proud of his high position in Canada and in the empire. He was proud of the demonstration of the day.

The Resolution Passed.

At a meeting of the committee of management of the Macdonald national memorial association the following motion was carried unanimously:

"That the committee hereby hand over to the city of Kingston, through his worship, mayor Wright, the memorial statue of the late Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald, now erected in the city park, and which not only reflects great credit upon the sculptor and designer, but indicates the deep affection entertained for the deceased by citizens and friends throughout the dominion. The work is beautiful; the effect imposing, and the monument lasting. We wish that the municipality, in accepting the memorial, will afford it care and attention that will keep it well preserved and make it as permanent and enduring as the work of the dead statesman in behalf of our country."

Mayor Wright's Acceptance of Monument

"On behalf of the citizens of Kingston I am here to-day to accept from the unveiling committee the magnificent memorial to the late Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald, G.C.B., which is now placed in our city park. It is a proud satisfaction to feel that it is not the result of any political organization, but that reformers and conservatives have gone hand in hand in this matter to pay a fitting tribute and do honor to the great statesman who represented our city for nearly forty years in the affairs of this dominion.

"Representing as I do the same city municipally, it is with a just feeling of pride that I find the duty falling to my lot of receiving this memorial on behalf of the citizens of Kingston, knowing as I do that it will be gratefully received by them, and ever be remembered by them as a token which will always represent to us in a substantial manner the well merited opinions

The Awful Turk!

Britain at the Dardenelles With a Strong Fleet.

Big Guns May Belch Destruction and Death.

The Lion's Power Must Give the Armenians Justice.

Brighter Days in Store for an Oppressed People.

October 24.—Dispatches from the best European sources assure us that the Turkish government has not yet fully complied with the demands made by the powers for reforms in matters concerning the welfare of the oppressed and crushed Armenians. England, urged by the united entreaties and prayers of her people, has taken a firm and determined stand, and maintains a powerful fleet near the entrance of the Dardenelles, ready to compel the cruel Turk to do justice to a people who have long groaned under terrible cruelties and iniquities. We are informed that even if the British are obliged to fight against a combination—perhaps Turkey and Russia—they will not hesitate a moment, no matter what the cost of the struggle may be. While we deeply sympathize with the down-trodden Armenians, let our thoughts revert for a moment to our own enslaved and suffering people in this Canada of ours. They are numbered by thousands, and are in some respects more to be pitied than the people so cruelly ruled by the blood-thirsty Turks. Instead of armored warships and batteries of modern artillery, as a means of delivery, our suffering people need Paine's Celery Compound, that God-giving remedy that "makes people well." By the aid of Paine's Celery Compound—that strong deliverer and rescuer—every sick man and woman may soon cast of the chains of disease. The rheumatic, neuralgic and dyspeptic soon find a cure. Headaches, sleeplessness and nervousness that make life a burden, are banished forever. All who are nearing the grave from kidney and liver complaint, heart disease, and the troubles that arise from impure and poisoned blood, are quickly released from sufferings and agonies; their lives are renewed, and a happy future placed before them. Are these results and grand physical reforms not worth looking after? A suffering and diseased individual will gladly part with his whole fortune for health. The use of Paine's Celery Compound entails no such sacrifice. In very many cases, a few bottles have sufficed to cure people who had been given up by the doctors. The record of Paine's Celery Compound in the past is a perfect guarantee of what it can do for all who seek for a new and better life. This wonderful medicine stands far ahead of all other medicines in the world. When compared with the ordinary medicines of the day, it is as much superior to all, as is the diamond when compared with common glass. Paine's Celery Compound has proved a life-saver for many a man and woman when all other human means failed. Common sense, the claims of your family, and the duty you owe to your friends and society, call upon, nay, demand that you do as others have done, use Paine's Celery Compound and make yourself happy and well.

This, says the London Daily Graphic, is certainly the golden age of operatic composers. It is stated by an Italian contemporary that a workman in the arsenal at Venice, named Coccolo, who is devoted to music, has recently completed the score of an opera, which he is naturally very anxious to get produced. Accordingly, the newspapers of that city have started a subscription list for the purpose of collecting a sufficient sum to cover the cost of the representation. Curiously enough, Signor Bertolini, a fairly successful Italian song writer at the present day, was also a workman in the same arsenal.
