The Royal Humane Society to be Asked to Grant a Medal for this Boldler-The Occasions on Which He Rescued Penple-There are Many Who Gratefully Remember His Acta

The mayor will write immediately, in accordance with the instructions implied by the action of the city council, on Monday evening, to the secretary of the Royal humane society of Great Britain, and prefor the request that the society grant its silver medal to Gr. J. Bramab, of "A" battery, R. C. A., in recognition; of his gallantry in saving six persons from death by drowning. Gr. Bramah richly deserves the decoration, and it was never worn' on the breast of a braver man. -

The first occasion on which Bramah distinguished himself in this city was in the summer of 1891. In July, 1892, two boys, one a son of Major Drury, commanding officer of "A" battery, the other a son of quarter master Sergt. Harris, of the same corps, fell off the Queen's 'wharf into the harbor. The water at this place was thickly grown with weeds, and was about twelve feet deep, and the lade were going down a second time, when Bramah, who was on duty near at hand, fan and jumped to their rescue. He succeeded in grasping both boys, after diving several times for them, and brought them to the edge of the wharf where spece tators assisted in lifting them out. mah was encumbered by his tightly fitting uniform, sidearms, and heavy boots, and by the weeds which grew thickly in the water at this place. His gallant act was witnessed by a number of persons, who, in the words of one who has testified, in writing, to the rescue, "did not care to risk their lives in trying to save the boys, as the place was very dangerous, on account night in Martin's opera house, was welcomed by an overflowing audience, and the character of the play merited the attendance. A thin, connected plot serve as a basis on which is built the formance, consisting of sele and part ing, skirt dancing, and a plethera of witticisms. Burt Harvey, 'a m one foot to the grave," as a ci ranks high in the class of fun makers. Sidney DeGray and Harry Rossiter are the possessors of magnificent voices, baritene and tenor, respectively. As a descriptive soloist the first mentioned displayed much ability in his songs, "The Widow" and "The Golden Rule." dom has a purer tenor voice been board there than that of Harry Rossiter. Clear sweet and appealing, its qualities were brought out, as well as the ability of the soloist, in the beautiful song, "The Setting of the Sun." The same might be said of Miss Barbe's voice, a soprano of brilliancy and richness, and of which the fair singer has perfect control. The dancing performed by Miss Myring has seldom, if ever, been equaled on the local stage. Her movements were graceful in the extreme in her skirt dancing, and as a sand-jigger she possesses decided merit. Taken all through, the company is a well-balanced one, without a weak character. Something seldom heard here was a whistling solo, given by John P. Brown, which was
