"Whereas, previous to the enlargement of the Welland canal, many boats trading from Chicago, Duluth, Fort William, and other western ports, bound down the St. Lawrence river, called at Kingston for supplies and to procure Canadian pilots; whereas, since the enlargement of the Welland canal to a depth of fourteen feet larger boats have been built; and whereas, there is a depth of only thirteen feet water at the foot of Long Island for a distance of about 200 feet, and these larger boats are thereby prevented from taking the Canadian route via Kingston, and great loss is thereby caused to the people
