LECTIONS OF THE VISIT.

He Went Home When Five Years of Age | gradually allowed himself to be drawn and For a Month Was to His Grand- into the experience meeting that progressmother's flome, But There Was No ed in the smoker. Grandmother, For the Had Just Died.

Laurence Hutton's recollections of his boyhood are in St. Nicholas under the title of "A Boy I Knew." His earliest visit to Scotland was made when he was but 4 or 5 years of age and long before he had as. sumed the dignity of trousers or had been sent to school. His father had gone to the old home at St. Andrews hurriedly, upon the receipt of the news of the serious illness of the boy's grandmother, who died before they reached her. Naturally the boy has little recollection of that sad month of December, spent in his grandmother's house, except that it was sad. The weather was cold and wet; the house, even under ordinary circumstances, could not have been a very cheerful one for a foungster who had no companions of his own age. It looked out upon the German ocean-which at that time of the year was always in a rage, or in the sulks, and the house was called Peep o' Day, because It received the very first rays of the sun as he rose upon the British Isles.

The boy's chief amusement was the feed ing of flour scones and outcakes to an old goat that lived in the neighborhood On presentation of standard form school and the daily walks with his grandfather, who seemed to find some little comfort and entertalnment in his grandson's childish prattle. He was then almost the only grandchild, and the old man was very proud of his manner and appearance an particularly amused at certain gigantic efforts on the boy's part to adapt his own short legs to the strides of his senior's

> After they had interviewed the givi and had watched the wrecks with witten the wild shore was strewn and had inspected the castle in ruins and the ruins of the cathedral the hoy would gaze upon his grandmother's new made grave, and hiown name in full-a common name in the family-upon the family tomb in the old kirkyard—all of which must have been ! very cheering to the boy, although he could not read it for himself.

And then-which was better-they would stand hand in hand for a time in front of a candy shop window, in which was displayed a little regiment of lead sol imposing and unconquerable lead fortress on the heights of barley sugar. Of this spectacle they never tired, and they used to discuss how the boy would arrange them if they belonged to him, with a sneaking hope on the boy's part that some day they were to be his very own.

At the urgent request of the grandfather he American contingent remained in St. Andrews until the end of the year, and the boy still remembers vividly, and he will never forget, the dismal failure of "Auld Lang Syne" as sung by the family with clasped hands as the clock struck and the new year began. He sat up for the oceasion, or rather was waked up for the occasion, and of all that family group he has been, for a decade or more, the only sur vivor. The mother of the house was but lately dead, the eldest son and his son were going the next day to the other side of the world, and every voice broke before the familiar verse came to an end.

THE PECULIAR DUTIES OF THE RIVER STEAMERS.

The Western Craft Fill the Bill to a Nicety-The Muchinery Can Be Satisfactorily Handled By a Small Number of

While the western American river steamer may be improved in some minor points, it is, in general design and construction, admirably fitted for the peculiar work that It has to do. Considered from a strictly engineering standpoint, it is a creditable structure. Furthermore, it is a striking example of the survival of the fittest. In comparing the advances which have been made in the ocean and American
