HER SUFFERING CEASED Mrs. R. P. Riches, 119 Major Stree Toronto, cured of Neuralgia by Mack's Rheumatic Pills,

Neuralgic sufferers will hail with delight a remedy that not only relieves but cures. Mrs. Riches was a great sufferer, and gladly gives her testimony for the benefit of others. She says:—I was greatly troubled for years with facial neuralgia that seemed to bid defiance to all remedies. Mack's Rheumatic Pills were recommended, and I used them with the result of a oure."

DRESSY GOWNS FOR SUMMER.

A Canvas Taffeta With Double Mesh-A New Satin Brocade-Silk Grenadines. French Poplins-Importance of Linings Under Transparent Gowns.

[Copyright, 1897, by American Press Association.]

Maybe it isn't new this week, but it is the first time I have seen it, and it is so unusually pretty that it caught my admiring eye. It was a canvas taffeta with double mesh, one being white and the other gold, each weven independently of the other, save where an occasional black satin brocaded cornflower held them together. The effect of the two meshes, one behind the other, is very curious and very striking. It forms a sort of moire which changes its outline with every movement of the wearer. There was another of these patterns in blue and tan, with blue cornflowers scattered sparsely over the surface, just enough to hold the two meshes together in spots. Others there are where purple and lemon yellow are shown, with yellow cornflowers on the upper weave. They are all very striking, but the white and gold color makes the most delicate design. These thin stuffs are wrought into the prettiest of summer gowns, but being rather costly they will not become common. They are $3.50 n yard. They require little trimming, nothing seeming to look right with the stuff unless it is chiffon or crepe lisse. Even silk muslin, popular as it is, looks too common

For handsome gowns for dressy occasions there is a superb new satin brocade, in all shades of gray, with dots and dashes of different colors over the surface, not too close, but just enough to define the pattern. The dashes run lengthwise. Green, crimson, black and heliotrope are the colors most often seen. One I remarked in gray and canary yellow was very pretty as a color combination, while the quality was as rich as the others.

Nearly all the taffeta now offered is soft and scarcely rustles, reminding one of the pongees in appearance, though they show a of the line bareges, organdles and pluments require a special color of silken lining to properly develop the design. The thin, crisp taffotas are by all means the best and the cheapest. For many gowns where an all silk lining is not imperatively necessary the new lusterine lining may be used. This comes in all the new colors. It is made of linen and silk and rustles as crisply as taffeta and is very light. Percaline is stiffening to give it an appreciable rustle. The silk warp bareges grow in favor, and they ought to. They are soft and delicate to the eye as anything can be, and they are universally becoming, one needing only to see that the color is personally suitable. Old folks can wear them, and little girls look sweet and childish in the delicate fabric. It is not very strong, and if children are to wear it it should be only for "best." The silk barege has been found suited for graduation dresses, offering, as it does, some variety. The old standard white freek has given place to the delicate tones in the floral designs of this exquisite fabric. What could be daintier than a silk warp barege of ivory white bestrewn with roses, daisies, dogwood, pink honeysuckle or bluets? Nothing, I think. The silk warp runs up and down and the wool across. The filaments of the silk are as fine as spider webs. The wool is thicker, but of the finest quality. This becomes the more prominent of the two textiles and presents a frosty bloom that silk could never have. It is truly very beautiful. Barege can be made in so many pretty designs that one scarcely knows which to smoother surrace than pongee. The rustling taffetas are used principally for shirt waists and skirt linings.

I saw one very dainty gown, and even the amateur would have little difficulty in developing it. The skirt was made over a lining of pale pink taffeta. The design in the pattern was rosebuds, with their foliage on a cream white ground. The waist was made surplice fashion, with a V opening in front, edged with narrow symrna lace. The sleeves were draped into puffs at the top and ended in slashed wrists, edged with the face. There was a pointed, draped belt of heavy cream satin ribbon, with a small bow at the side. The skirt had five rufiles of the barege. The bottom one was eight inches deep. The next three were four each, and the upper one was three inches deep and set on with a Spanish heading. A daintier, more summery. gown one could scarcely imagine. When I say eight, four and three inches, I mean that measure before it is hemmed and gathered. These ruffles were all cut on the straight.

The beautiful silk grenadines are in high favor for summer gowns, but there are only two kinds that are durable. All those with satin and lacelike figures will roughen and fray with very little wear. These are the prettiest too. The printed grenadines are exquisitely beautiful, and they are smooth and firm, but cost $3.50 to $3.50 a yard, so that they are practically beyond the reach of most people. That narrows the choice to the wire meshed and iron frame grenadines. These are really strong and never fray or tear out, but their beauty is refiex and comes mostly from the bright silken linings and the trimmings. These plain grenadines may be trimmed with anything, as everything goes well with them. I saw one black iron frame grenadine made over a fancy tafteta, the colors being of blue, green and yellow in a complicated design, the whole being changeable. The grenadine was hemmed around the bottom and shirred at the waist. It was gathered in a little round rosette at the left hip, which raised the skirt slightly on that side, but enough to show the underskirt of the taffeta. The waist was of the taffeta, with the grenadine draped in surplice fashion in a way to show the silk. The sleeves were tight, of taffeta and with the grenadine laid on smoothly so that the rich colors could be seen through it. There are some new moire velours glace for handsome visiting gowns. They look very heavy, but are really light. They are in garnet, shot with black, green with heliotrope, green with mahogany brown, blue with olive and blue with tan. The garnet and black is exceptionally handsome. The olive and blue is very refined. All of them are among the handsomest and most satisfactory of the season's goods. They are $1.25 to $1.50 a yard, 27 inches wide.

French poplins are shown to a greater extent than they ought to be, though, to be sure, they do look well on the counters. There are hair lines in every conceivable combination of color. Checks are also presented, the squares being scarcely larger than pinheads. Some of the prettiest have hair line checks of black over reseda, rose, emerald, white and cerise. They cost from $1.25 to $1.50 a yard and are 27 inches wide. They are well enough for house gowns, but not good for outdoor wear, as dampness spoils them. There are also numbers of new designs in plaid poplins besides the old standard clan plaids. There is a new kind of poplin called liberty poplin. It is a sort of imitation of Irisb poplin. It is lighter and thinner than the original, but has a brighter luster. Some of it is brocaded in small figures, like stars, crescents, dots and pin points. It is pretty, but not exactly pleasing. There is a poplinette which has a fine, round cord, and this, too, is brocaded with swivel fig-ares. The foulard silks are often woven with japquard figures and also swivel flow-

The linings of the summer gowns are to se studied seriously this season, as the fress materials are so transparent that not only the color of the lining, but its texture, shows through. Besides this, many summer dresses. It is offered in every imaginable variety of color and design, the favorite being the cream or ivory ground, wish flowers. The floral designs are large and small. Scrolls and set figures are also seen. The prettiest way to make these is where the material can fall in long, easy lines. Watteau backs and loosely draped fronts are graceful. Where it is desired to have a regulation dress the skirt may be made plain or ruffled, as one prefers. The surplice waist looks best, as it gives opportunity for the draping across the front. A blouse front for the very young is quite suitable. The surplice front was made to one pretty challie dress. The skirt was plain and full. The design was pinkish cornflowers on a tan ground. There was a flat ruffle of tan silk muslin around the neck and down to the left side of the waist. The neck was open V shape. The sleeves were in two puffs and reached to the clbow, where they ended in a deep ruffle, edged with one of the silk muslin. The finishing touch was the wide sash of green ribbon the exact shade of the green in the floral design.

week. The material was hairline poplin two shades of gray. The light shade was a pure silver, and the darker one was almost black. The skirt fitted snugly all around the top to the back. At the bottom there were six felds, three of the light dress goods and three of dark gray grosgrain silk, exactly matching the dark line in the poplin. The waist was a plain French one, with the fullness brought into little plaits in front and at the center of the back. The belt was of the silk, with an emerald and gold buckle. The sleeves were tight, having cuffs and caps made of folds to match those in the skirt. Six folds crossed the bust. The collar was a plain band of the dark silk. This gown was a real rest for the eyes after seeing so much bright color. In another place saw a skirt where there was one ruffle ten inches deep, and above this were set ten bias felds, each one inch and a half wide, and they were set an inch and a half apart. That brought them up nearly to the waist. Braiding on walking gowns of cloth, serge or cheviot is growing more and more popular. In most cases it is sewed on in set pieces, but in others it is put all over in a gort of wandering labyrinthine pattern, as if the one who designed it "fell asleep and sewed it on in a dream." If There is One Thing

More than another that impresses experienced bicycle riders with the E. & D. wheel it is the high quality of material, workmanship and finish that enter into its construction. Time and money have been sacrificed without stint so long as the "best" was produced. The Main feature, however, is the bearing. This is so constructed that dust or rain cannot get into the ball race and the oil cannot get out of the pathway of the balls. For this reason it is only necessary to oil the E. & D. wheel BUT ONCE A SEASON. No oil can is furnished with kit of

THE FARM HAND'S REWARD.

Was Kind to a Poor Woman and Inherits $73,000. SAN FRANCISCO, May 28 .- William F.

Hastings, who has worked as an ordinary farm laborer for years, has just received news frem England that he has inherited $73,000 left him by a woman whom he had befriended fifteen years ago when she was poor and ill in California. At that time Hastings worked on D. O. Mills' suburban estate at Millbrae. Miss Carrie Burch was one of the housemaids. She fell ill and Hastings loaned her $200 of his savings.

After her recovery she went away as a nurse to a rich woman, who went to Australia. There Miss Burch married a 1etired shipmaster named Hall. She repaid Hastings, and he heard no more of her till a few days ago, when he received a letter from a lawyer named Watson, of London, saying that six years ago Mrs. Hall died, bequeathing him all her estate. Since then Watson's American agent has been trying to find Hastings. The lucky man is thirty-five years old, and has never been outside of California. He is waiting for a remittance to go to England.
