DEATH OF GEORGE A. BEGG.

Poisoning Was The Cause-Took Drugs

For Headache. On Saturday afternoon at three o'clock sad intelligence of the sudden death at Syracuse, of George A. Begg, eldest son haney, Sullivan, Smith and McAuley, of $957. The cash donations from many haney, Sullivan, Smith and McAuley, of $957. George Begg, baker, William street. The only information given was that death was due to poisoning. It seems that Mr. Begg was troubled with chronic headaches, and was in the habit of using drugs for a temporary cure, and to this cause is due his death. He was in the city spending the queen's birthday, and apparently in in the best of health. The news of death was a great shock to his parents and his many friends. The body arrived in the city on the cape boat at noon to-

Deceased was educated at the public schools and collegiate institute. Being inclined to the drug business he entered the establishment of N. C. Polson & Co. in 1891, taking out articles of apprenticeship. After serving the required time of four years as clerk, he left for Toronto in September, 1895, to attend the school of pharmacy, from which he graduated as a druggist in January, 1896. He was in charge of Hobart's drug store during last fall. In March last he secured a good situation as head clerk in J. F. Decoudres' drug store in Brighton, Syracuse, where he was when death took him. Deceased was of a quiet and unassuming disposition, and had wide circle of friends.
