Our Columbia 5 per cent Nickel Steel Tubing shows a tensile strength of over 100,000 pounds to the square inch. 25 Carbon tubing ordinarily used in bicycles has a tensile strength of about 55,000 pounds to the square inch. Over a hundred thousand miles of practical road testing confirm our laboratory experiments --proving our patent flush joint connections to be much stronger than our 5 per cent Nickel Steel Tubing as used in frames ... and the Nickle Steel Tubing itself twice as strong as Tubing ordinarily used.

Perhaps it would not talk this of protecting the tree wealth, and of securway if it had gone more fully into the ing the re-efforestry of acres cleared, or

> And this is taken as an evidence that the timber limits of the province are being exhausted and that the commission, influenced by the conservative press, should have been appointed long ago. The conservative interpretation of the proceeding is, therefore, peculiarly its own. Some years ago the Ontario government became interested in forestry, in the scheme of educating the people in wood raising for two reasons, (1) because the presence of forest certainly affected the crops, favorably, and (2) because the timber of Canada promised to be its most profitable investment. So Mr. Phipps was chosen, not because he was a kicker and had made a discovery, as conservative opinion puts it, but because he was an authority on tree growing and an enthusiastic in the busigrowth than for any other purpose."

And the commission is in perfect accord with conservative philosophy! How can that be if John Sandfield Macdonald's policy was "to regard the timber wealth of the province as so much capital of which the government of the day was to jury. spend only the interest?" How was this interest realized except by a sale of limits, and without knowing what these limits were like, and their value, how was the interest to be computed? That is a serious question, a problem difficult of solution, if Hon. John Sandfield Macdonald "sold the limits under his control cautiously, and never merely for the purpose of raising revenue." Then why the sale at all What did the man mean by his performance? What did he want with the money if note to spend it? To count it, like the miser, and chuckle over his accumulations?

The Macdonald surplus, we are told, quickly vanished. Where? How? Memory takes one back to the work of Messrs. Blake and Mackenzie, and after them to the work of Sir Oliver Mowat and his colleagues. They were anxious to go with the progress of the people, and spent millions in bonusing the railways which were wanted to develop the province and its commerce, to meet the wants of the deaf and dumb and blind and halt and insane, to alleviate the sufferings of all and sundry whom misfortune placed as a burden on the people. This money has not been wasted, but is represented in monuments that are as enduring as any of brass.

The government is pursuing now the policy long since decided upon, and in development of plans which date back to the establishment of the Bureau of Forestry. The scheme to awaken an interest in the territory, which has long since been denuded of its timber, and the hope is that it will be a success. The timber resources outside of these limits is another consideration. They are such, in extent and value, as makes it a matter of no present concern when they will be exhausted. Such is a contingency too remote to give worry to the generations of to-day.

Sir John Macdonald's eminence as Canadian statesman and his good points are freely acknowledged by all parties the inspector of postoffices was calling for friend and foe alike. While he is thus so freely honored, so entrenched in good opinions, is it worth while for the conservatives of Kingston to infringe on the merits of another patriotic Canadian, Hon. George Brown, to gain laurels for their champion? It is claimed for each that he was the father of confederation, with the facts in favor of Hon. George and the volume of hero worship in Sir John's favor; but it is absolutely certain that without the coalition of the two leaders, confederation would have been impossible. Even politicians can afford to be fair at the graveside.

The story is abroad that Hon. Mr. Laurier is to be appointed chief justice of Canada. It's terribly absurd; not only that, but, as the Witness remarks, "it would be criminal for Mr. Laurier to despise his country's mandate and to desert her when he is able to do so much for

The Various Communications Presented

At The Meeting. At Tuesday's session of the county coun cil these communications were read From the clerk of Dufferin county, closing a copy of a memorial intended presentation to the legislative assembly, with a view to amending the act relative to county jails and houses of refuge. The spirit of the memorial was to the effect that instead of building houses of refuge which may be better adapted for wood throughout the province for the maintenance of poor and vagrant persons, that portion of jails now standing be set apart for these persons, and that they be not subjected to the same discipline as criminals committed to these institutions.

The secretary, Rev. J. P. Gerrie, of Toronto, then read the annual report of the union committee. Pleasure was expressed again meeting in Kingston after an absence of seven years. More than usual prosperity was reported among the churches. Gratifying additions to the churches were reported. . The financial standing has, on the whole, been encouraging, despite the commercial depression. Reference was made to the union between the Congregationalists and the evangelical unions of Scotland as an indication of the growth in the world of the spirit of church union. The hope was expressed that the union would make some declaration regarding the coming plebiscite. The government was congratulated on the removal of the Manitoba school question from federal politics. It was hoped that some fitting recognition of the queen's jubilee would be made in the form of some permanent memorial by a further endowment of the college, the placing of our missionary societies on a firmer financial basis, and by the thorough and lasting equipment of the Congregationalist in the service of the denomination. #### SWAPPING HORSES.

An Animal That Was Too Hard Fee General Grant to Manage.

General Horace Porter, in his "Campaigning With Grant" in The Century, tells the following anecdote of his chief during a ride from Petersburg to City

Owing to the beat and dust the long ride was exceedingly uncomfortable. My best horse had been hurt, and I was mount ed on a bay cob that had a trot which ne cessitated no end of "saddle pounding" on the part of the rider, and if distances are to be measured by the amount of fatigue endured, this exertion added many miles to the trip. The general was riding his black pony Jeff Davis. This smooth little pacer shuffled along at a gait which was too fast for a walk and not fast enough for a gallop, so that all the other horses had to move at a brisk trot to keep up with

When we were about five miles from headquarters, the general said to me in a joking way: "You don't look comfortable on that horse. Now I feel about as fresh as when we started out."

I replied, "It makes all the difference in the world, general, what kind of horse one rides."

He remarked, "Oh, all horses are pretty much alike as far as the comfort of their gait is concerned.'

"In the present instance," I answered, "I don't think you would like to swap with me, general."

He said at once, "Why, yes; I'd jus as lief swap with you as not," and threw himself off his pony and mounted my un comfortable beast, while I put myself astride of Jeff. The general had always been a famous rider, even when a cadet at West Point. When he rode or drove strange horse, not many minutes elapsed before he and the animal seemed to understand each other perfectly. In my experi ence I have never seen a better rider, or one who had a more steady sent, no matter what sort of horse he rode. But on this occasion it soon became evident that his body and that of the animal were not always in touch, and he saw that all the party were considerably amused at the jogging to which he was subjected. In the meantime Jeff Davis was pacing along with a smoothness which made me feel as if I were seated in a rocking chair. When we reached headquarters, the general dismounted in a manner which showed that he was pretty stiff from the ride. As he touched the ground he turned and said with a quizzical look, "Well, I must ac

CROSSING THE ATLANTIC.

Some Hints on Manners It Were Well to Observe at Sea.

The shortness of the voyage has largely killed off the cordiality which is apt to break out among fellow passengers long at sea together, despite themselves. This short period of good fellowship is not so repugnant to an experienced traveler as to some others if there happen to be agreeable people on board. He does not misunderstand civility as an effort on the part of the people to make his acquaintance. He knows enough to mind his own business on sea or land. But the man who relaxes conventionalities not at all on shipboard is apt to have a pretty dull time, which, however, is just what a dull man likes. A civil word, a passing remark, or even two remarks, can do a person of tact no harm nor lead to social complications later. A friendly attitude is more sensible than standing conspicuously aloof from everything or than repressing all signs of interest in existence or than rigidly disregarding the fact that any one is on the ship besides oneself, and defensive airs are generally offensive-at least they are airs. Some Americans seem to think that a haughty demeanor will have the effect of a title upon their fellow passengers. But it generally does not. Sir Walter Scott is credited with repeating Montaigne's remark that every man knew some one thing better than he did, and when he met a stranger, therefore, he engaged him in conversation to find that one thing out. In Scott's day to be a courteous gentleman or a gracious lady under all circumstances was not considered bad form. One of the most popular men I ever saw on shipboard was a New Yorker whose family, whose social position and whose public station and influence are most enviable. Wherever he is is the best society. On the trip I have in mind he seemed to have said or done or looked something amiable toward everybody. Yet I don't believe anybody tried to presume upon his civility then or afterward. - Lewis Morris Iddings in Scrib-

The Power of Habit.

The power of habit is particularly exemplified in the effects produced by the company we keep. The utmost vigilance, therefore, should be exercised on this important subject. The great power and force of custom form an argument against keeping bad company. However shocked we may be at the first approaches of vice, this shocking appearance goes off upon an intimacy with it. Custom will soon render the most disgustful object familiar to our view, and this is indeed a kind provision of nature, to render labor and toil and danger, which are the lot of man, more easy to him.

The well disposed youth, entering first into pad company, is shocked and disgusted at every turn, at what his sight beholds and what he is compelled to hear. The good principles which he had imbibed ring in his ear an alarming lesson against the wickedness of his companions. 'Rut, alas, this sensibility is of short co unuance. The next jovial meeting makes the horrid picture of yesterday more easily endured. Rectitude is soon thought a severe rule. an inconvenient restraint. A few pangs of conscience now and then whisper to him that he once had better ways and thoughts. But even these by degrees die away, and he who at first was shocked even at the appearance of vice may be formed by custom into a profligate leader of vicious pleasures.-New York Ledger.
