WITHOUT AN AUDIT.

The shock caused by the flight of Sir soe's defaulting treasurer has been intens fied by the finding of the expert examin ers of his books. Their discovery is to the effect that for about ten years there not been a proper audit of the books, the not in all that time has a check mark of any kind been put on the ledger accounts that Mr. Sanford "did practically as liked and controlled auditors and audits. salary was $1,500 a year and he spent it and about $50,000 of the is that the county councillors cannot personally be held to account for this deficiency. What is the obligation of a representative? Is it not to administer the trust reposed in him faithfully and well And this trust is to see that the accounts of the people are carefully and completely examined, that nothing is missed or lumbias and Hartfords, at reasonable overlooked, and that an honest report of all the facts has been presented. As a matter of fact the auditors' report should show that all books have been examined, and this report should be published for the information of all concerned. The failing in Simcoe is not apparent, but it is not improbable that the auditors who did their work the cheapest were preferred, and that they have been suiting their service to their reward. How timely, in view of these cases, is the action of the local legislature in providing for special audits in special cases, and for such an inspection of county books and records as must add to the security of the public funds.

WANTING TOO MUCH.

There are some who do not sympathise with the bibycle men in the defeat they have suffered from the senate which bas rejected the bill that essayed to make the railway companies their bikes as baggage. A bicycle is so constructed that it cannot be roughly handled. Were this to be carried free the number would be such that an extra car would have to provided, since they could not be railway service implies extra expense, We are making a specialty of which the companies have a right to resist painting Cotton Banners and Stream- with all the energy they can command. Nor does it seem right that parliament They are not near as dear as you'd shall say to these companies what they be affected and in a very serious way. But this is not the contingency which affected the senate most. The weakness of the bicycle bill was the imperious spiri with which it was carried through the commons. The idea was left that the wheelmen, in number and influence, had reached a point where their demands could not be ignored. Mr. Casey's handling of the case was not discreet. The lower house discussions had prejudiced the senators and they lifted the measure into obscurity for this year at least. It may be revived at another session, and if so it is hoped its promoters will be more modest in their plans. It is a question if they can expect a complete surrender to them of roads and sidewalks and parks and railways. There are some people who do not ride bikes, and they will not be ignored.

MORE YANKEE CHEEK.

A correspondent of the New York Sun has been at great pains to ascertain the ideas of the Cubans as to their political future. He has impressed upon those who command the revolt against Spanish rule the tact that America—the United Sta by its new and more comprehensive nameis willing to help them in their struggle, looking, no doubt, to an eventual political relationship such it has just entered into Hawaii. And the correspondent has been surprised to hear that the Cubans do not want assistance, that all they desire from the Americans is a recognition of their belligerency, which, it is alleged, will enable them to take such action as will drive the Spanish off the island. Much more of similar talk follows, and then comes the

"There is good reason for the belief that Spain is willing to allow Cuban independence to be gained if the insurgents will abide by the reforms, and that the Spanish troops will be withdrawn and the Cubans allowed to form a government, with a militia organization to protect the island against hostile invasion. The step to in-dependence would be short, and Spain would be in a position to claim that Cuba had set an example which Canada might follow without danger of hostilities with Great Britain."

cans desire? This agitation for separation in Cuba and Canada, so far as the Yankee conspirators are concerned, has not been founded on their anxiety for the political welfare of the Cubane or Canadians, but the hope that eventually, and in some way, the republic will have a chance to add to its territorial possessions. It has long cast envious eyes upon both Cuba and Canada, but to no purpose. The independence Cuba seeks is not to be embarrassed by American entanglements; and the politi cal outlook in Canada is not in the direction of doubtful American favours. Canada's imperial policy puts the indepen dence bogy in pickle. The Caban message through the New York Sun to i readers is, "Mind your own business."

circulated in the United States by a New York newspaper, which has alleged and reiterated that queen Victoria has suddenly and unexpectedly become almost totally blind, thus throwing a damper over the jubilee celebrations, it could have been found in the bright and cheerful appearance of her majesty on her arrival here. But in addition it is learned that the queen has personally read numerous documents and programmes connected with the jubilee festivities during the past few days, and that within the same time she has with her own hand written frequent corrections and alterations, and it is known beyond any possible doubt that her majesty has recently corrected proofs of a new book on her reign. As to her general health, evidence of it being perfectly satisfactory for a woman of her age is furnished in abundant ways.

AN INFANT ANATOMIST.

A Five-year-old Boy Who Knows All About Surgery.

We read of infant prodigies of all sorts, but the most phenomenal of juvenile wonders up to date is a 5-year-old anatomist who is astonishing the medical fraternity of Chicago by his precocious knowledge. His name is D. Will Gwin, and he is the son of Dr. Howell B. Gwin, who recently located in Chicago.

Little Master Gwin's familiarity with long medical terms is wonderful, and such names as "mesosternum," "alisphenoid" and "ceratohyal" slip as glibly off his tongue as would come the Mother Goose melodies from other children. They are no parrotlike phrases which he has acquired in a mechanical sort of way, but he can apply to sach bone in the human body its scientific name. He hapdles a skull and any part of a skeleton with as much familiarity as other boys do the usual nursery playthings. He knows all about the heart structure and all its complex functions, and can talk about it in techrical terms with a full understanding of what he is saying. He is right at home in a dissecting room, and looks upon cadavers with all the indifference of an old practitioner.

Willie's father is inclined to believe that his son is a striking and unusual example of hereditary influence and adaptation, concerning which there has been much speculation, but about which we have little real knowledge. Dr. Gwin himself comes from a family of physicians. For three generations the Gwin family on the paternal side have been graduated physicians and surgeons. There have been several physicians in the family of Mrs. Gwin

Dr Gwin first discovered his little boy's medical bent only about a year ago, when in a teasing way he repeated several long technical words and asked Willie to pronounce them. To his surprise, the little fellow found no difficulty at all in doing so. Then his father told him what the long words meant and showed him where the bones were located in his own body. Then he began to become interested in the work which his father was doing in the dissecting room. He seemed absolutely devoid of any childish terror at sight of a dead body, but listened with interest when his father made long explanations.

A short time ago Willie was taken before the Alumni association of the Rush Medical college in Chicago and put through a public "quiz" by one of the learned faculty. He answered all the questions promptly and accurately, much to the surprise of the big gathering of physicians.

We could do would be to try and deceive you as to the worth of goods. You'ld be pretty sure to find out the truth sooner or later. A wise friend might tell you. Your own careful second thought might tell you. However you found out you'ld only have to bring the goods back to get the money they cost. But we do our storekeeping on a broader basis even than that. Suppose you are only dissatisfied with your purchase, that no one has misled you, but that you've only changed your mind. That's enough-bring the goods back. We are only glad to have you buy here, when you are glad you bought here and stay glad.
