POLICE COURT, Thursday .- The clean docket presented this morning was another evidence of the prevailing good morals of the city, and these evidences, by the way, are by no means rare. The only business before the Court was the case of Inspector Mostyn against James Typer of Rideau Street, for selling liquor without license. Two witnesses were examined; one of them gave straightforward testimony, and the other prevaricated, as is the case with far too many witnesses in such cases. Mr. Creighton considered that the charge was proven, and imposed a fine of $20 and costs.

Here it may be well to draw attention to the determined nature of the new law in regard to the offence of selling liquor at the discretion of the Magistrate ; for a months, without the more agreeable alternative of a fine; and for the third offence indifference in the matter on their guard.
