SOCIAL ETIQUETTE.

The Magic Pasteboard and Its Many Convenient Uses in Society. To many people the visiting card is but an insignificant and trifling bit of paper, but those who "know society by beart" make serve as a convenient meckum of social inter course. For instance, cards have become very useful as means of conveying somew) informal invitations. For dinners, balls and madequate; but Good Housekeeping nounces them in good taste for dar lunches, "at homes" and teas, and says: The words "at home" are written upon card by the hostess herself, also the hour and "Dancing," "Progressive cuchre." The cuvelope should exactly fit the card, and while it is not out of place to send by mail, it is better taste that they should be delivered !

The convenient card is also used in reply ing to invitations. This is frequently correct but not unless the invitation itself was in that form. Where one more formal was engraved or written in the third person, a note, also is the third person, is necessary. In using the card the phrases, "Accepts with pleasure:" or, "Regrets to decline," are proper, but it i not allowable to merely write "Accepta" "Declines," as, this is too curt a form to
