KATE KEARNEY'S GOTHAM NOTES.

How Gambling Takes the Lines of Loveliness Out of the Female Face and Leaves the Countenance Marked by Greed and Selfishness—A Johnnie Squelched.

(Copyright, 1890.)

NEW YORK, April 3.—Funny how things change, isn't it? There was a time when a good grandmother used to say that gentlemen weren't supposed to know of the existence of petticoats, but a man nowadays would have to be absolutely blind if he did not wish to know not only of their existence but to see them. Every befrilled part of a woman's underwear is displayed in the shop windows, and man would be more than mortal if he didn't stop and gaze. There is something wonderfully fascinating about the pretty silk skirts, with their lace frills; the silk undervests that look as if they were spun by the fairies, the brocaded or satin corsets that are going to hug a pretty form as close as possible, the long silk stockings and the little bifurcated affairs that are made of lawn as an excuse for their frills and insertions of lace and to allow a monogram to be put high up near the belt.

THE PEEPING TOM PASTIME.

One of the prettiest windows on Broadway is full of these things, and out of every four people standing in front of it three are men, and yet curiosity is said to be a feminine vice! Who wears them? Well, underwear is like gowns in one respect, every well dressed woman has her peculiar fad about it. Somebody was telling me the other day that although Mrs. Kendal was such a well dressed woman, she wore the most absolutely old fashioned underwear imaginable. Silk vest, then over it a muslin chemise, a flannel petticoat, another heavy petticoat and white corsets. I could only exclaim, Good gracious! All such belongings went out with the hoopskirt. Fanny Davenport is luxurious about her lingerie, usually wearing silk undervest of rose or blue, lawn other things, a silk petticoat and pale rose satin corsets. Mrs. Langtry, who would spend more money on a petticoat than many women do on an entire outfit, had all her silk lingerie come from Felix. She wore mauve or rose colored silk with the three feathers of the Prince of Wales and the intertwined L's, exquisitely embroidered on each piece. In color mauve or rose was given the preference.

A FEMALE POKER GAME.

The bifurcated affairs were very short, very wide and tucked by hand above a trimming of lace. The chemise was of silk the same color, cut out round and low, trimmed with lace at the top and bottom, while the petticoat was accordion plaited and set on a yoke so that there might be no extra fulness about the waist. The corsets matched in color, and their peculiarity was, in addition to their being very long, that they were closed in front and had two broad iron bones the full length, under faced with plush so that they might not hurt the delicate skin. They were laced on in the back and kept at the regular measurement every day. It's a step in the right direction for women to wear fewer underclothes and certainly nobody can blame them for liking to have the daintiest and prettiest possible. With all these silk suits, by the by, nightdresses to match and having yokes and cuffs of point de Venise lace awaited the hour when my lady wished to slumber, so that there could be no doubt that she would look as beautiful then as during the day.

Speaking of Mrs. Langtry, there seems to be some doubt as to whether Mr. Frederick Gebhard is in New York or in London. It is first said that he is here and then that he's there. But if he is adorning New York by his presence, he is doing what the darkies say courteous things from being so near a clever woman, and nobody can believe for a minute but that when she left this shore Lily Langtry was very glad to get away from him. He is of a sullen and suspicious temperament, and if you have ever lived in the house with a man like that you know how he can nag. It seems very probable that there has been an absolute break, and that Mrs. Langtry has found consolation on the other side of the water.

The three questions of the day that seem most to trouble the average reporter are, "Do women smoke?" "Do women drink?" "Do women gamble?" They do all three, and seem to enjoy all three with a keenness that only comes from having forbidden fruit. At a smart luncheon, the other day, after the greater number of the guests had departed, the hostess and a chosen few sat down in a closed room to have a game of poker. They all smoked either Turkish or American cigarettes, and each one of them had, beside her pile of chips, a glass of something to drink. Of the five who were playing, three had brandy and soda, one whisky and ginger ale, and the other had a goblet filled every now and then by a looker on with champagne. The game was a pretty big one—a dollar was the limit. The last hand pretty nearly cleaned everybody out, and two women, expert players, were left as the only ones. They were blonde and brunette—they bet and raised and bet and raised until the pile got to be very nearly seventy-five dollars.

The brunette said in a very excited way, "My dear, I advise you to stop betting, for you can't beat my hand!" The blonde very calmly said, "I don't want your advice!" And she raised again. The brunette then grew nervous and called her. One of the outsiders said, "Now, for fun let Mabel show her hand first so that we may see the hand that can't be beat." Proudly the brunette put on the table a full hand—kings high with queens next. Quietly the blonde reached over to take the pile, and with equal quietness she showed four aces and a king. The pot was hers. And all she said was, "I would have bet all night on that hand." The brunette was stayed with a little more whisky and ginger ale, and the party only broke up in time for them all to have a nap before they met their legal lords at dinner.

Did you ever watch a woman gamble? The more interested she grows in the game the more her face loses its womanliness, and no matter how lovely she may be, she looks a picture only of greed and selfishness. Even more than on a man is the ill effect of gambling shown, and a woman who wants to keep a man's admiration ought never let him see her play poker.

The young man who frequents the stage door of the theatres, who wears his lawn tie twice around his throat and a watch in each pocket with a fob hanging, was lately beautifully squelched by a woman who had to earn her living by the sweat of her inkstand. He met her at a reception given by one of the most elegant women in New York—a reception that was really exclusive, and where Mrs. Dash was a welcome guest because her mother and the hostess had been schoolmates and friends before the daughter knew what it was to have to go out in the world and face the blast of adversity.

The ill bred Johnnie had been brought by a friend, and was in reality a stranger in this set. He noticed Mrs. Dash, and felt that he could at least snub her, so walking up to her he put out his hand and said in a loud tone, "Ah! How do you do, Mrs. Dash! How did you happen to come here?" All the blue blood in her veins grew very warm, and, raising her eyes, she looked at that daring young man and said, "I was invited; weren't you?" The Johnnie turned and walked away like a whipped cur, and the woman who brought him got a note from her hostess that evening requesting her never again to bring any one to her house without first sending his name and asking permission. It was the triumph of brain over brawn and of a bright woman over a cad. But you can always bet two to one on the bright woman. Hasn't that been your experience? KATE KEARNEY.

THE CURIOSITY SHOP.

A Collection of Fugitive Facts and Out-of-the-Ordinary Information.

To William of Orange may be ascribed the saying, "Die in the last ditch." When Buckingham urged the inevitable destruction which hung over the United Provinces and asked him whether he did not see that the commonwealth was ruined, "There is one certain means," replied the prince, "by which I can be sure never to see my country's ruin—I will die in the last ditch."

A Few Railroad Facts of General Interest.

The cost of railroads in the United States has been $9,000,000,000. One million persons are employed by the railroads of the United States. The cost of a high class eight wheel passenger locomotive is about $8,500. The cost of a palace sleeping car is $15,000, or, if vestibuled, $17,000. The average cost of constructing a mile of railroad in the United States at the present time is about $30,000. The highest railroad in the United States is the Denver and South Park, a branch of the Union Pacific, at Alpine tunnel—11,596 feet above the sea level. The largest American railroad tunnel is the Hoosac tunnel on the Fichburg railroad—four and three-quarter miles. There are 508,749 railroad bridges in the United States, spanning 3,213 miles. The longest railroad bridge span in the United States is the cantilever span in the Poughkeepsie bridge over the Hudson river—548 feet. The highest railroad bridge in the United States is the Kinzua viaduct on the Erie road—305 feet. A steel rail lasts, with average wear, about eighteen years.

Arbor Day.

The individual states have striven to encourage tree planting by appointing a certain day in the year, to be known as Arbor day, for the voluntary planting of trees by the people, and latterly the interest has been widened by inducing the pupils of the public schools to take part in the observance. The credit of inaugurating Arbor day belongs to the Nebraska state board of agriculture, which in 1874 recommended the second Wednesday of April in each year as a day dedicated to the work of planting trees. The following states and territories have since then, by legislative enactment or otherwise, established an annual Arbor day: Alabama, California, Colorado, Connecticut, Dakota, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Kentucky, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Montana, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, West Virginia, Wisconsin, Wyoming—35 in all.

Manual Training Schools.

Statistics furnished by the educational report make it appear that there are 18 manual training schools in the United States, with 83 teachers; 14 of these are females. These schools have property in buildings, etc., to the amount of $281,000. There are 3,946 male and 293 female pupils enrolled in these schools. The New York committee on manual training gave the following estimates of the cost: Of beginning: Workshop outfit, $300; kitchen outfit, $200; construction or preparing room for each, $60,. Of maintaining for a year: Renewing outfit, 10 per cent. of workshop, $30; kitchen, $20; material for woodworking, $50; kitchen, $100; sewing, $50; construction work, $25. Most of the manual training schools are specially adapted to cities, and cannot be established successfully in sparse rural populations.

AN ANCIENT PYRAMID FOR SALE.

The Great Cahokia Mound Offered to the United States Government.

Thomas T. Ramey, of Madison county, Ills., has a unique piece of property for sale, and he wishes the United States government to become the purchaser. It is the great artificial hill at Cahokia, in St. Clair county, Ills., which is the most stupendous memorial left by the prehistoric people called the mound builders. This hill has an altitude of 102 feet, its base covers sixteen acres and it contains at least 20,000,000 cubic feet of earth. Says Mr. Ramey in his letter to Senator Cullom suggesting the purchase of the gigantic pyramid by the government:

THE BIG MOUND AT CAHOKIA.

"It is a parallelogram with straight sides, the longer of which are north and south. The top of the mound is flat and divided into two parts, the northern end being four or five feet higher than the southern portion, the summit containing about one and one-half acres. On the southern end, some thirty feet above the base, is a terrace or apron containing nearly two acres of ground. In the middle of this terrace at the base of the mound is a projecting point, apparently the remains of a graded pathway to ascend from the plain to the terrace. On the western side, and about thirty feet above the southern terrace, is another terrace of somewhat less extent. The side of the mound below the western terrace is very irregular and forms projecting knobs. To the northeast corner of this large structure there seems to be a small mound attached. The remaining sides are quite straight. Cahokia is the largest pyramid in the world, surpassing the pyramids of Egypt in size."

Changing the Sheets.

To change the under sheet when a patient is very ill and weak is a matter of some difficulty. Here is one method of facilitating the matter: Begin at the side and roll the sheet lengthwise. Push soiled sheet and all coverings toward the patient, leaving the mattress bare. On this lay the clean roll, tucking one side under the mattress, unroll it towards the patient and move him over the roll on the smooth space, keeping him covered with the top blanket. Go to the other side of the bed, pull out under blanket and soiled sheet, finish unrolling clean sheet and tuck it in. Lay the clean upper sheet over the top blanket and cover it with another blanket and thin white spread. When these are in place, remove the blankets that are next the patient, and he will be left lying between clean sheets without having been exposed for an instant to the chance of taking cold.

AMUSING AND INSTRUCTIVE ENTERTAINMENT FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.

A Few Suggestions to Lads Who Are Fond of Playing at "Saute Mutton" or Leap Frog—One Practice That Ought to Be Avoided.

Leap frog is a game known to all the older boys, but to make it better understood by little fellows, we will suppose that eight boys are playing at it. Seven of them stand in a row, about eighteen feet apart, with their sides to the leapers, hands on their knees, body doubled and head bent down. The eighth player then takes a short run, and, placing his hands on the back of the first player, leaps over him, then over the second, and in like manner over all the other players, one after the other, and when he has done so he places himself down in the line, in the proper position and at a proper distance from the last player; the first over whom he jumped rises immediately he has passed and follows him over the second, third, etc., who all rise in succession and leap in their turns; and after they have successively jumped over the last players, they place themselves down in the line, as before described; the game continues during pleasure, or, rather, till all the parties are tired.

PLAYING AT LEAP FROG.

Some players stand with their backs to the leapers, as is shown in the cut, instead of their sides. The mode is optional, although in some sections it is usual to compel those who can jump over the head to do so. One practice must be particularly avoided, and any player found guilty of it ought to be at once excluded from the game. We allude to the trick called fudging, or suddenly stooping just as the jumper is taking his leap over your back. The result of this practical joke is that your friend, instead of having the slight fall you intended for him, may come to the ground with great violence and injure himself seriously. We have heard of a collar bone broken through fudging, nor was the said bone fudged back into its place without a good deal of painful suffering to the injured boy, and well earned remorse endured by the thoughtless lad who had caused the accident.

Benjamin Franklin's House.

The following anecdote is told of Benjamin Franklin: When he was traveling in cold weather and saw no vacant place at the tavern fire where he could warm himself, the genius whose statue adorns Printing House square cried out the order, "Half a peck of oysters in the shell for my horse!" Upon this all the fireplace crowd rushed out to see a horse eat oysters. Very soon the hostler returned and said, "Why, sir, your horse won't eat the oysters." "Won't he?" said Franklin, now comfortably seated by the fireside. "Well, then, bring them in and cook them, and I'll eat them myself."

A Unique Pen Wiper.

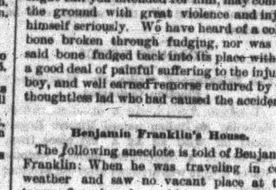
Golden Days suggests that if there is any little girl who wishes to give her father or brother a birthday present, she can do so at a very small cost by giving him a "Red Ridinghood" pen wiper. It is made from a wishbone of a chicken or turkey, dressed in scarlet cloak and black petticoat, and may be furnished with a doll's head or not, as the giver chooses.

The following lines, pinned to Red Ridinghood's apron, explain the practical use to which it is henceforth intended to be applied:

Once I was a merry thought,
Growing in a hen;
Now I am a little slave,
Made to wipe your pen.

Quite a Singer.

A little man, pressed for a song,
Could not be induced by the throng.
"I'm sorry," he said,
With a shake of his head,
"But I've not brought my music along.



I BELIEVE I COULD GO UP TO E.

"It's a pity it happens just so,
For you'd all like my tenor, I know;
So high it can rise,
That I oft close my eyes
So terribly dizzy I grow.

"The musical scale, as you see,
Has the letters from A up to G;
And, if it were set
Through the whole alphabet,
I believe I could go up to Z!"

—St. Nicholas.

The Use of Neither and Nor.

Discriminate in the use of neither and nor. Don't say, "He would neither give house, nor land, nor money." Say, "He would give neither house," etc. The conjunction must be placed before the excluded object. Don't say, "He can neither help his infirmity nor his weakness." Say, "He can help neither his infirmity," etc.

The First and Last Call.

When mother says "Johnnie,
Won't you please get up, sonny?"
Why, Johnnie can't hear her at all;
But when father says "John!"
John's slumbers are done—
He knows it's the first and last call.

Beauty and Utility in Architecture.

Each day the spirit of the age seems not only to sanction, but also to demand with ever increasing insistence the union of the beautiful with the useful. This applies, among other things, to architectural and engineering designs. It involves no more expense—so experts say—to build a house or barn with an attractive exterior than one that only satisfies the requirements for room and comfort and in outline looks uncompromisingly ugly. The same proposition applies to more pretentious structures erected by municipalities or by private citizens for public use. Among these latter are to be numbered water towers. It has been the rule, until recently, to regard the necessary but unadorned iron cylinder as fulfilling all requirements.

Of late, however, the residents of cities, including those who are compelled to gaze daily upon an unpleasing tower, have come to the conclusion that lofty structures of this class may be made ornaments to the landscape instead of blots. Not long ago the existence of a general but unformed popular opinion in this respect was recognized by Mr. Henry C. Meyer, editor of The New York Engineering and Building Record, and at his own expense he opened a competition for designs for a waterworks pumping station and a water tower. Over fifty architects responded, and the results attained far exceeded what had been expected. The first prize went to a Milwaukee competitor, the second to a resident of Brooklyn, and the third and fourth to Boston architects. Outside the technical excellence displayed, the chief point regarded as solved by the competition is that of wedding beauty to utility. It was shown that it costs little or nothing more to build a water tower architecturally handsome than one pheonomenally hideous.

A Trip to Manitoba.

Last year I went to Manitoba on the C.P.R. At Rat Portage I got sick, and at Winnipeg I was so weak I had to be assisted off the train. I got a bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters, and after the first dose felt better. When I got to Rainy River I was as well as ever. The Bitters cure the bad effects of the surface water of the prairies.

SIDE LIGHTS ON A TRAGEDY.

Glimpses at the Domestic Life of a Man Slayer.

At Mimico, a town near Toronto, Canada, a tragedy occurred recently which has landed one man in his grave and another in a felon's cell. The killing was the culmination of a drunken quarrel, begun on a train and ended after arrival at the railway station. In detail the particulars seem to be these: John Byron, who was drunk, asked John Wade his opinion of a ballad some one was singing. Wade replied curtly and Byron struck him. Wade threw Byron back in a seat of the car and threatened to "do" him later on.

At the station Byron offered an apology, which was refused, and in the subsequent fight stabbed Wade in the neck, causing his death. The victim of the affray was a young man and unmarried. His slayer is of middle age, and has a large family at St. Catherine's. To him and those dependent on him a certain pathetic interest attaches, despite the terrible crime with which he is charged.

JOHN WADE.

John Byron is a veteran of the late war, having participated in eighty-four engagements, from skirmishes to battles, as a soldier of the northern army. He was wounded on the head with a sword, and those who know say that liquor drives him frantic since receiving the injury, but that when sober his temper is of the most placid sort. He is a poor man, and his domestic life seems to have been that of a humble hero.

Although the father of ten children, dependent upon his earnings for support, he added to this large burden willingly and cheerfully. Remarked his wife: "When my brother died John said: 'I won't see his children want. I guess we can feed two more little mouths.' So we adopted them. A little while after his widower brother died, and he said, 'Go and get poor brother's children. I won't see them thrown on the world so young to shift for themselves.' That was two more, so we worked to keep our hungry little flock of fourteen. John never whipped the children. When I'd whip 'em because they deserved it he'd look wistful at me. When sober he was as gentle as a little child."

At the time of the killing Byron was foreman in charge of the asylum now building at Mimico.

A Brush with the Apaches.

Advices from Banispe, Sonora, Mexico, say that the Mexican troops came upon two renegade Apaches recently and exchanged shots with them, killing one. Other hostiles came to the rescue and were driven on their stronghold on the top of the mountain, where they opened fire, wounding three soldiers, one fatally. The Indians kept up the fire from early morning until late at night, forcing the troops to retire.

The next morning the troops again marched on the stronghold, but the hostiles kept up such an incessant firing that the troops, who were nearly exhausted from thirst and hunger, were compelled to retreat. The next day the Mexican troops received reinforcements and charged the stronghold, but found it abandoned. The Indians had left a large amount of clothing, provisions and saddles behind them. They moved north, followed to the line by the Mexican troops. They had twenty-one horses and plenty of arms and ammunition.

Centered Her Affections on Cats.

After the death of her twin children who lived but an hour, Mrs. Jane Duncan, of New York city, developed a mania for cats. Her husband, a journeyman carpenter, bore meekly and patiently with her weakness for eighteen years. Then he died, but beyond notifying a neighbor, his wife paid no attention to the event. Friends looked after the funeral arrangements, and subsequently had the demented woman taken to an asylum. When the apartments were cleaned up the other day for occupancy by a new tenant, twenty-seven full grown cats and a large number of kittens were evicted. They seemed to know that their friend had gone, for none of them has attempted to return since receiving notice to quit.

The Power of the Press.

"I don't want that young fellow to come around here any more," her father gave out decisively.

"All right, father. He is only a newspaper reporter, and"——

"A reporter! Oh, well, in that case I don't think it's any use. In the first place, it wouldn't do any good, and we'd only be having him coming down the chimney or through the window, so I guess we had better yield gracefully."

And the evening after she told him it was pleasure to them both to acknowledge the great power of the press.

A Noted Bulgarian Free Lance.

Bulgaria is a picturesque country, and has a picturesque, although turbulent, people. The women are noted the world over for their physical beauty, and the males are magnificent specimens of well-balanced manhood. Some of the latter are distinguished not only for their personal attractions but also for what they have done. In this category must be classed the ex-brigand and present state suspect Major Panitza. The "irregulars" which he commanded just before the Turco-Russian war harried the Turks out of the country and took permanent charge of the fugitive Moslems' possessions. Panitza afterward became commander in chief of the Bulgarian legion. The daring with which he led his reformed banditti to battle brought him credit, and he was given the rank of colonel in the regular Bulgarian army. He throve under the rule of Prince Battenberg, but now that Prince Ferdinand of Coburg is on the throne he finds his life anything but pleasant. Accusations of treason have piled up against him, he is a prisoner, and the Bulgarian popular feeling of today seems to favor his execution. But he is worth a dozen dead men yet.

The Czar—Have you looked well under the bedsvitch?

The Czarina—Yes.

The Czar—And in the closets?

The Czarina—Yes, dear.

The Czar—Then give me my steel lined night gown, set the man trapsky, give me the double barreled pistolovitch and turn the gas off. I shall seek pleasant dreams wherein I may see that black-and-tanovitch rascal, Georgeoff Komanski, breathing the sweet air of the Kara prison.—Pittsburg Bulletin.
