A French grenadier, in a war with the Austrians, was put in charge of a small fort commanding a narrow gerge, up which only two of the enemy could climb not give up the place without a struggle, so he burred the doors, raised the drawbridge and loaded all the muskets left behind by his comrades.

Early in the morning, with great labor, the enemy brought up a gun from the valley and laid it on the fort. But the grenadier made such good use of his loaded muskets that the men in charge of the gun could not hold their position, and were compelled to retire, and he kept them thus at bay all day long.

At evening the herald came again to demand the surrender of the fort or the gar rison should be starved out. The grenadier asked for a night for consideration, ness of the garrison to surrender if they might "go out with all the honors of war. This, after some demur, was agreed to, and presently the Austrian army below saw a single soldier descending the height with a whole sheaf of muskets on his shoulder, with which he marched through their lines and then threw them down. "Where is the garrison?" asked the Austrian commander, astonished. "I am the garrison," replied the brave man; and they were so delighted with his plucky resistance that the troops saluted him and called him the "First Grenadie:
