The Herefords are well adapted both for RICHMOND, ORR & CO. grazing and stall feeding. On the plains and ranges beyond the Mississippi they have proved eminently successful, both as full bloods, and for crossing on the "native" cattle. In the great corn belt they respond quickly to generous feeding. As to the comparative merits of the Herefords and Shorthorns, Hon. Henry Clay, the first importer printing, which will be sold very cheap, of the former, wrote as fellows: "My opinion is that the Herefords make better work cattle, are hardier, and will, upon be ing fattened, take thems lves to market better than their rivals. They are also Wide, one and a-half yard's wide, fair milkers. On the other hand, the Dur hams, I think, have the advantage in early maturity, in beauty, and in quantity of milk which they will yield. They will also attair great size and weight even. The choice be patterns of eight yard wide tween the two races should be regulated somewhat by circumstances. If one has rich and has not too far to drive to market, he had better breed the Durhams, otherwis the Herefords." This was eminently just and true at the time, but the changes of seventy years have somewhat modified the ral, Brussels, Wilton and Axminster circumstances. American breeders have aimed so exclusively to beef production a Carpets always kept at Carpet House of to breed out, to a large extent the milking qualities of both races; and railroads bay become so plentiful that beeves no longer have to "take themselves to market." thermore the Herefords are not behind any other breed in early maturity. In fact there is no longer any unfriendly rivalry between the breeds. Each one has its ow, excellences and both have become thorough ly well established in American husbandry. In England the Herefords have been sub ject to equal fluctuations as in this country Though mainly a local breed there, it was the most fa shionable one in the United Kingdor. a hundred years ago. The Live Stock Journ al of London says: "From the year 1799 1834 Hereford oxen had taken eighty-eigh premiums at the London fat-stock show-mor than double that of any other breed of cattle gained in the same period," But their popularity in England declined and reaches. its lowest point about 1840, when the firs United States.
