Great curiosity has been awakened because of the unusual character of the subject, and the large audience had decided that a woman who had explored the hard Carpathian district must be elderly, weather beaten and masculine. Great was the surprise when a graceful young lady, tastefully dressed, began a delightful story of original experiences and observations during a journey alone, with a native guide in the Carpathian mountains. At the close Miss Dowie received a remarkable ovation from the learned professors, who applauded, and tendered a special vote of thanks for the uncle was the superior of a convent near ample of this sort of misdirected ability. on the fragrant grass with her eyes closed. den away and she had smiled on him as he paper, which the president pronounced to be of great value geographically, as well as exceedingly entertaining.

AUSTRALIAN WOOL.

The wool season in Australia, which has just closed, shows a very large exportation of that material-larger than the previous year by 150,000 bales. The total number of bales exported is 1,326,643. To this amount Victoria contributed 400.359, an in rease of 63.757, and New South Wales 443 800, an increase of 20,957, while New Zealand exports were 210,263 bales. The wool actually produced in Victoria is only about one fourth that of New South Wales but the latter finds an outlet for a large portion of its production through the ports | he did not hesitate to attribute to the devoof the former. The increase of the value of the clip is about $24,000,000, and the total value of the product is $103,000,000. The number of sheep in Australia is about

CHEAP ADVICE.

Ope of the funniest features of the tariffdis nation is the advice which the tory shop keepers-the hardware men, toe chandlers and dry goods men- are giving to the farmers. These don's think the agriculturists should give way to despair. They mustn't grow so much barley and other grains, but go into the raising of that for which a mar. Egypt, said to have been written by an ket can be found outside of the United States. The townsfalk, of course, know all Pills, Surpass all other Tonic Pills about farming and have a right to give the misguided sons of toil zome cheap advice. But what a time of it the farmers would have if they undertook to tell the hardware man how to buy his locks and nails and axes and putty, the chandler how to buy his tallow and, make his candles, and the dry goods man how to select his calico and feathers. Every man knows his own business best, and the farmer can be safely de pended upon to make the best shift under he circumstances in which he finds himself. He can appreciate keenly what it is to be deprived of what has been called his natural market, and he only can measure what the loss will be. Of course he may survive the McKinley siege as any business man can survive the sudden loss of his custom, but he can't tell yet what he and there is not

To him the opinions that are being given off hand by the politiciannat large seem impartinence of the mos. unexcusable character. They are at any rate a diagust ing method of affording relief to the dis couraged and distressed. It is all very fine for the monopolists to offer their chaff to the farmers, but it cannot deceive the manority, and may for the time being influence the government, and have its policy shaped in their favor. But the farmers have it in their power to scoure what they want in the way of tariff, and they will be foolish if they

HELPING CAPITAL. Hamilton, like Kingston, is concerned about the manner in which capitalists may be encouraged to locate and commence operations in that city. One firm sent a communication to the council, and the Times tells us that the chairman, sled and White Casti'e Songs, Call and empt'on upon boilding, machinery, plant, personal property and income, and for water DRUG STORE, for the pumping of it, but he would go no further. He would tax the land according to its value, and he would not consent to the rave remaining the same for all time. The sheme is not different from that which many favor here, but it is different from that which was enggested at the meeting in the council chamber the other evening. The auscesment has been a bar to prosperity in Kingstoe. That is, the assessor puts upon a business enterprise, and so one has felt that every spurt be made, every effort put forth in the way o progress, has cost him dearly in advanced taxation. The assessor was not, of course, to blame, because he discharged his duty as he understood it. The defect has lain with the council which has had the power to de-

THE LEARNED FORGERS FAMOUS COUNTERFEITING MANY LITERARY TREASURES. Constantine Simonides and His Bogus

Greek Manuscripts - Ireland's Noted Shakesperean Forgery -- Vrain - Lucas A popular desire to possess that which is rare and antique has proved an incentive to some of the most adroit forgers the appear, their skill has deceived many of the most gifted men. Whether it be coins, medals, pictures, pottery or postagestamps, you have only to visit certain cities ; in Europe to obtain a supply that would gladden the heart of an antiquarigit. In-

has become an industry in which are em ployed many hundreds of persons, and so defily done is their work that the manufactured article is often honored with the choicest recess in the cabinet, or finds a place among the most valued treasures of the picture gallery.

The subject is suggested by the recent death of Constautine Simonides, one of the most noted forgers of Greek manuscripts known in modern times, and he recalls, by the way, the names of a number of others who in their day and generation have illustrated the gullibility of human nature. manners and endowed with rare persuasive powers he was everywhere welcomed by the enthusiasts. He even penetrated to the deserts of Asia, where he made many unlooked for discoveries that facilitated his plans for the future. For instance, once failing into the hands of a brigand, he found the latter an archeologist, who preserved in a cavern many choice antiquities, and on parting with Simonides presented him with valuable vases as a farewell gift. Among the early works of Simonides was the pretended will of Symia written by a monk of the Thirteenth century, and tees of this school the greater part of our modern inventions-paper, printing, the telescope and even the steamboat. At an other time he prepared a paper supposably of the Fiftgenth century in which he introduced the discovery of the daguerreotype, and among his productions were fragments of the classical authors, Hesiod, Homer the authorities that he was even appointed a committee to examine autiquities.

The paper with which he provided himself, consisted of fly leaves from old books, his ink was prepared by a book binder, and thus all suspicion was averted. The attention of the literary world was at once aroused and the house of Mr. Ireland was dally thronged by persons of the highest rank in the social and literary world. A party of surand their funny little memorandum books, come within a quarter of a mile of the homestead. It was not wonderful to them. Their business was to work miracles or to prepare for them. But to the McInernys t was the bringing of the whole round earth to their doorstep.

And the prince came with the surveying party. It was the very one that the fairy godmether had promised to Norah when she was born. Norah knew him at once, He was fall and broad, and as active as a cat. And his voice was music, and his face was the handsomest that a man ever had And when he looked at Norah the blushes came to her face. She turned and ran before he could ask for the drink of water he wanted, and much amused and a little surprised he stepped on toward the house, where the good mother gave him milk and where the good mother gave him milk and was originally a silk merchant in Spital and tar and feather him, and tell him in cream, and laughed proudly when he apol-

-----"If it be well to wash the skin -- and we never heard the proposition questioned-it is well also that we should be familiar with the means by which that purpose may be most efficiently attained.

"We once knew a beautiful woman, with a nice complexion, who had never washed her face with soap all her life through; her means of polishing were, a smear of grease or cold cream; then a wipe, and then a lick with rose water. Of course we did not care to look too closely after such an avowal, but we pitied her, for soap is the food
