They sailed up the lake on the steamer Chieftain and were accompanied by the captain of the Rogers, Mr. Laflamme. The boat was found resting level on a rocky beach exposed to the weather. There was no shelter near. If there had been she might not have been damaged as much as she is. The hull is very much decks were found perfectly dry. The water in her hold had not risen above the cabin floors, and they were also dry. There was plenty to eat on board. Capt. McLeod said sailors were in great danger. They could and been as safe as if they were in their homes. But they were frightened and anxious to get clear of the ship on the night Capt. LaFismme went on board of the Rogers yesterday and gathered up the dothes belonging to the sailors. The beds, which were dry, and other articles were transhipped to the Chieftain and brought to Capt. McLeod says they will try and sell
