WEDN'SDAY EV'NG, APRIL 14, 1875 A BEAUTIFUL RHYME.

Here is a little song by Jean Ingelow, is snatched from advance proof-sheets there are any musical composers and readers let them set it to music at once almost sings itself:

'Midsummer night, not dark, not light,

Dusk all the scented air, I'll e'en go forth to one I love, And learn how he doth fare. O the ring, the ring, my dear, for me, The ring was a world too fine, I wish it had sunk in a forty-fathom sea, Or ever thou mad'st it mine.

"Soft falls the dew, stars tremble through, Where lone he sits apart, Would I might steal his grief away To hide in mine own heart Would, would twere shut in you blossom The sorrow that bows thy head, Then-I would gather it, to thee unaware, And break my heart in the stead.

"I hat charmed flower, far from thy bower,

I'll bear the long hours through, "hou should'st forget, and my sad breast The sorrows twain should rue. O sad flower, O sad, sad ring to me, The ring was a world too fine And would it had sunk in a forty-fathom sea Ere the morn that made it mine.
