approaching Centennial celebrations at Concord and Lexington on the 19th inst. the rivalry between these two towns, which are contending for the honor of being the scene of the first fight of the War of the Revolution, attracts general interest. Several letters are to-day published on the subject. Frederick Hudson, the well-known journalist, claims for Concord the honor of making the first armed resistance. G. W. Curtis also writes giving Concord the honor of the first organized resistance, although a few Americans at Lexington returned the British fire. The interest in the Centennial celebrations to be held in these places is rapidly increasing, especially in New England, where it absorbs every other topic. The statues of John Hancock and John Adams are to be unveiled at Lexington.

The Tilton-Beecher Case.

The defendant and chief witness so far in the Tilton-Beecher case finished his exmination in chief, yesterday, when his cross-examination began. Even those most inclined to side against Mr. Beecher are said to be very much impressed by he energy and completeness of his deni als of the principal and salient points i the testimony of his accusers. ounsel for the defence have boldly taken the bull by the horns, and whenever Mr. Evarts touched upon any of these points, such as the interviews with Mr. Tilton or Mr. Moulton or with Mrs. Moulton or any of the remarkable letters and memoranda, he constructs his questions in such a shape as to make the denial that comes in the form of an answer not only complete, but positive in its tenor and scope. When Mr. Beecher denies the statements of the opposing witnesses he denies emphatically and frequently the most solemn manner. On his first appearance as a witness he took an oath that of whom his friends are justly proud, and ought to be more binding on his consciwho has acquired in a very short time the ence than the one usually taken on the admiration of his political opponents, and Gospels, and not content with this, he frequently swears over again while uttering his denials. The contradictions could not be more decided than in the form they go on the minutes of the Court. The question now is which side tells the ruth ? To those who believe in the theory of false witnesses it is very clear that
