Sir John Herschell.

Ladies are often entreated to use their influence on the side of total abstinence, and not to marry unless their weaker half can exhibit his signature to the pledge In a breach of promise case recently tried at Shrewsbury, in England, the position the parties was curiously reversed. Hurst; the defendant, is the sen of a clergyman, and brought up in the stret practice of total abstinence. Miss Wynne. the plaintiff, is the daughter of a jovial squire, accustomed to drink wine and ale in this City, habitually. They became engaged, and everything was got ready for the wedding. Miss Wynne had promised to give up intoxicating beverages after her marriage, but just before the time set for that event she wrote to Mr. Hurst: "Dear Tom-About the drink, and your not allowing o at a great sacrifice.
