It was probably fifteen minutes before the Captain could get a boat lowered. A crew were spatched with the purser to obtain assistance and returned after a long time lowed by several habitants in their scows. Tho other life-boats were lowered manned with a crew of six men in 'each. The Captain acknowledged that the remaining boats wete unseaworthy. The lady passengers were despatched first, six accident, and be carried over the bould SCHOOL ers. He stated that they were perfectly safe where they were till morning, and that any person who left the vessel in the habitants scows did so at his or her own risk. However, as all the ladies Mr. Dalton's party were sitting disconsolately on the shore while their fathers and brothers were on board, liable at any moment to meet with a watery grave many passengers as could be prevailed upon to leave the vessel at $2 per head ness. By this means between 40 and 60 persons were landed; but Mr. Dalton lost somewhat by the transaction, as some would pay and some would not. By this time Mr. Milloy, the Company's agent, had arrived and had the party conveyed to the railway station, and thence to Montreal by special train. Mr. Dalton and his friends expressed their dissatisfaction at the apparent lack of discipline among the crew of the vessel; but spoke Un- highly of the ability of the habitants
