CRITICISING THE OFFICIALS. The Montreal officials are a badly used lot. Some of them have been putting on airs by residing outside the city and the council has decided that they shall reside within these limits and pay any spare money they have over to their employers in the form of taxes. These who have become possessed property, outside the city, have pleaded special consideration and got it They have been given a year in which to dispese of their possessions. But reside they must in the city. It is that which, in the opinion of some people, not their mental status, duly qualifies them for office. The council will be next proceeding to order what they shall eat and what they shall wear as civic functionaries. Theoretically the new sovereign has the right to resume possession of the crown lands when he as cends the throne, but practically he has no choice except to make the best ar and rangement possible for compensations for a fresh life tenancy on the part the estate. The civil list of William IV was cut down to £385,000 at the opening of the reign of Victoria, but this was increased after her marriage, an she retained the revenue of the duchy of Lancaster, and the prince of Waler that of the duchy of Cornwall.

The hereditary revenues of the crown under state management have greatly expanded in value, so that the sovereign would be theoretically entitled t a lorger civil list, but parliament virtuelly retains the privilege of regulating the expenditures of royalty and maintaining the dignity of the monarchy according to its own ideas of propriety. As there has been a great increase in the royal expenditures and scale of liv ing, there is valid ground for an en largement of the civil list.
