Reminiscences of a famous murder case are called in by the presence in the Kingston penitentary of Smith, the man 4t will be remembered that Smith was the hired man, and he was convicted of] the crime on the evidence of Mrs. Fin. lay, who became the principal witness for the crown after denying all knowledge of the crime. Smith was sentenced to be hanged, but through the indefatigable exertions of Hon. David Glass, Q.C., his counsel, now of Rossland, reprieve was granted him. For years he lived in the hopes that he would receive further elemency from t crown, and be set at liberty, but the pardon came not, and his mental faculties could no longer stand the strain, and to-day he is an inmate of the ward for criminal lunatios. Up to the day of his break-down he protested his innocence. He never had any friends except his counsel, and no one knows anything about his antecedents.
