Concert At The Penitentiary.

Whilst the saints are enjoying a plethora of concerts, given under the auspices of their different churches, some of the unfortunate sinners whose lives are buried "for a season" in that little stone-walled terribory, whose very name suggests punishment, were permitted for a brief space on Thursday night an amelioration of the sentence, which a broken law considers an equivalent for offence, and held their concert also. It had been made a hard and fast rule that none but officials should be present, and only those of the convicts who could contribute to the programme permitted to attend—the rest were as usual locked in their cells.

The opening number was a song, well rendered, by the Protestant choir. ministral show followed, in which bones, A. Howland, and trombones, Ambrose McLennan, Frederick Scott, William Baker, W.
