NO USE FOR HAYCOCK. Mr. Whitney has no use for Mr. Haycock, the member for Frontenac in the legislature. Mr. Haycock has disappointed the opposition. So have all the other patrons, and they ought to be ashamed of

When the patrons came out of the last election with a representation which, while not imposing, was looked upon as a menace to the existing parties, the tories seemed to be concerned. Mr. Marter-the grandpa of the party—and then acting as its leader, conceived the idea of hypnotizing the patrons. He was a bit of a patron himself. He had been known to go around with hayseed in his hair and burs in his whiskers. He was an ideal agriculturist, more ideal than real. So he laid in wait for the members whom Mr. Haycock led. It was all arranged that the patrons and the conservatives should unite, should vote the government out of office and divide up the spoils. The union, such as Mr. Marter proposed, might go lame, but being a man of great girth and faith, he was very hopeful that time and Providence would be on their side. Somehow the scheme did not develop. Mr. Haycock did not walk into Mr. Marter's parlor, was not caught in his net, was not willing to sell out his party for a mess of pottage. Then the conservatives turned upon their new-found friends. Mr. Marter took Now is your chance. Season is not | the hayseed out of his hair, the burs out of his whiskers, and the roll out of his pants. Then the party threw him overboard and put Mr. Whitney in his place. Ah, but the royalties, what of them : Men who obtain education, poor men sometimes, men who have had to make sacrifices in order to acquire learning, and men who make the best use of their time when they become experts, write books on certain subjects, and these, in the light of their experience, are better than any before in use. The minister of education passes upon them; and if his judgment is the same as that of others, who have examined the books, and others competent to judge, they are authorized. That authorization carries with it no corner, no monopoly. The royalty is fixed, so is the price, and the book is purchasable on its merits. At any time a better book may be written by a better hand, and by one who may have suffered greater hardships in order to get his education. And he gets the reward of his labours, the permission to sell at a stipulated and reasonable price the book he has written. All these books are for class subjects, and are not the readers which are uniform in all the schools.

Note two things: (1) That the school readers, as the White in a recent article pointed out, are cheaper than they have ever been, because the minister cut down the price in renewing the contracts in 1896; and (2) that the royalties on high school and other class books, average ten per cent., do not exceed that, except in a couple of cases, and are limited to fifteen per cent., and in the opinion of the royal commission, nothing could be more reasonable and fair.
