Origin of Deadhead.

Very few persons are aware, says an exchange, of the origin of the word 'deadhead," which is so frequently used in connection with theatrical representation: . It is stated to be as follows: Many years ago in the time of turnpikes, the principal avenue of a 'town passed close to the entrance of a road leading to the cemetery. As this cemetery had been laid out some time previous to the construction of the road, it was arranged that all funeral processsions should be allowed to pass along the latter free of toll. One day, as a well-known physician who was driving along the road stopped to pay his toll, he observed to the keeper: "Con sidering the benevolent character of our profession, I think you ought to let us pass free of charge." "No, no, doctor," said the gatekeeper, "we can't afford that; you send too many deadheads through as it is." The story traveled around the country, and the word "deadhead" was eventually applied to those who obtained free admission to the theatre.

Advertisers Are Immortal.

Great advertisers live in the history of the city and the prosperity of their firms long after they themselves have "shuffled off this mortal coil;" their announcements in the newspapers continue to bear truit after the advertisers are dead. On the other hand, the non-advertising business man is dead to the community long before he leaves this life; and his business is more than apt to die with him.

China. This was the first fruit of that famous tour. Again, last year, according to U. S. consular reports, there was devoted to the study of English language and literature in the schools of Japan an average of six hours a week, while upon Chinese-Japanese language and literature only five hours a week was spent. It was also last year that President Diaz made the study of English compulsory in all Blazems, sir, had tramped from England

"Here is the record of three great countries in a single year. It confirms the results of Sir Michael Mulhall's last table, wherein he shows that of all the seven European languages, English alone has increased in use since the beginning of the century:

|            | 1801. | 189 |
|------------|-------|-----|
| English    | 12.7  | 27  |

"The only barrier which now blocks the way to the immediate acceptance of English as the world's language of commerce is the lack of a court of accepted authority on the idiosyncracies of English orthography. On this subject the Boston Journal said recontly:

" 'The court of arbitration the Englishspeaking people most need is—a perman ent, final authority appointed to decide officially the best way of putting the English language on paper-writing, printing, orthography. This lack is incurring the waste of a thousand millions of dollars annually.'

'This is absolutely true. Our great commercial competitor, Germany-the one country most active in her endeavor to displace English by German or some universal language-remarks that it wil be a disastrous day for her hopes when such a court of permanent official author ity is established, for it would inevitable make English the universal language trade.

HIS TOUGHEST WALK.

The Major Was Playing Treadmill on a

Sprinting Glacier. We started out in the early morning from the hotel, the major carrying a pair of fieldtempt the trip.

"Pooh, pooh!" he said in answer to one alayas and the mountains of the moon, ascended Popocatapetl and have crossed the Sahara on foot. Why, sir, I could run up a little hill like Tamalpais blindfolded and not even pause to wipe my forehead." We said no more of the subject and finally reached Larkspur, where we began to make the ascent.

At the station the thermometer registered 70 degrees, but by the time we had finished the first quarter of the ascent it seemed about a thousand.

Presently we arrived at a point about half way up the mountain, and the major suddenly came to a halt. He again waved his arms about and then sat down. "It is too great for speech," he said, mopping his brow. "The incline?" I ventured.

"No, sir, the scenery," he thundered, with punctuating puffs between each word. "A little walk like this occasionally is what a man needs to keep him healthy. sir. I came of a race of walkers. The o India had there been no water between the two places. Fork over some grub. It is 2 o'clock.

"Yes, sir," resumed the major, "this is easy walking to what I have done in my day. The hardest climb I ever had was on one of those Swiss glaciers. I was alone, for I always prefer to travel without guides. As far as the eye could see there extended a mighty bed of ice as flat as a mirror and without a single object on it to relieve the monotony. After walking for three hours it dawned over me that I was making absolutely no progress, though at first I was at a loss to understand the "Happening, however, to stand still for one moment, I found that the glacier was slowly slipping from beneath my feet, and that, although I had been going through the motions of walking, in reality I had made no progress whatever. I therefore commenced walking in a direction at a right angle to the one I had been taking, and after a short while succeeded in getting-not on terra firma, but on glacier firma again. But that was the toughest walk I ever had."

The major had no sooner finished his story than he gently dropped off to sleep, apparently with a clear conscience.—San Francisco Call.
