Marion, Ind., has just been completed. It is the finest, most modern and most expensive haven of rest for the veteran of the dvil war that the government has provided. It is the seventh of these institutions which the nation has established for the purpose of cheering the declining days of the heroes who wore the blue. All the others are crowded, and while the finishing home the foundations were laid for an Nine years ago the first work was done land located near Marion Into a veterans' city. Now the 35 buildings which constitute the home are finished. The total ex-

The 14 barracks are neat, attractive looking cottages of pressed brick, each two stories and a half high. They serve merely as sleeping apartments, but they have every comfort that an old soldier could wish for. Hig verandas encircle them and afford
