The rivers and akes are black with them in the spring Dr. Kingsbury spent several years in Alaska with the United States surveying commission which fixed the territory. During boundary of the that time he experienced some remarkte encounters with ducks and geese. said Dr. Kingsbury. "Every person who goes to Alaska should be provided with a good ten-bore shotgun. Enough ducks can be killed in the spring to last until the fall. In the fall another supply can be laid in to tide over the winter months. "Why I have seen ducks so thick overhead that the sun would be obscured for thirty minutes. During the second year we were in Alaska the ducks made so much noise along the Yukon that we could not sleep. We could not frighten them away from near our camp on the bank of the river, and concluded to lay in a big supply of duck ment for the coming winter. Besides, our meat suppy had grown very scarce, and we were in actual need of fresh food.

"There were ten of us with good shotguns and plenty of ammunition. Well geese was a caution. We had duck for reakfast, goose for dinner, and duck for supper. Talk about eating thirty quails in thirty days! That feat isn't goose three times a day for six months. So, when it comes to eating, don't say remedies have been talked about and written duck to me. They generally prein for the geese, because they are larger and can be preserved better. They hunt geese with clubs, and manage to kill hundreds in one night. This is the way they go about it: The geese generally hand on sandbars at night. Two ladians will watch a certain sandbar until it is pretty well covered with game. Then they pull out from the bead of the island and the other at SBETS the foot. When each has had time to effect a landing and tie his boat the man at the head of the island gives a signal and both start in beating the geese with their clubs. The geese are are disturbed suddenly lose their heads. Before they can clear the island hundreds have fallen victims to the clubs. At dawn the island appears to be full of dead geese. On one occasion over 500 geese were bagged by Wellandvale Wheels two Indians on an island in one night. "There is little use for a rifle in Alaska, but a good gun will come in
