THE CORRECT EDUCATION. Prof. Capper, of McGill university, Montreal, in an address to the graduates at the closing convocation, pointed out that important as was college equipment it was not everything.

"Too much faith," said he, "more particularly in the new world, has been placed in equipment. What is needed in the university is the inspiration of the man. To suppose that the individual teacher did not matter much seemed a strangely narrow view, and one that could not be reconciled with facts. The enthusiasm of a personal influence is a greater factor than the most personal apparatue, and the continuity of personal in struction is essentially the progressive
