

Tailors are not Mind Readers

You select the cloth, see the fashion plate, and form a mental impression of how a chosen style would look on you.

The Tailors idea differs, and the suit, when finished, looks as he thought you wanted it to appear.

It bears his individuality not yours. It may lack the little characteristics of shape you like—possess those you would avoid.

"Fit-Reform" suits (ready made in nine shapes) permit you to see just how they look on you, just how they fit your ideals before purchased.

You know what you get, pay half the tailor's price, have no further "fitting on" and the suit is sent home at once.

Makers brand and price in left breast pocket.

THE DAILY WHIG.

"Opus per Orbem Diem."

THE HOSTILE SENATE.

The Senate of Canada is bound to be hostile. It has given a second reading to the bill which Hamilton Smith has projected, and which aims at the incorporation of the Pacific & Yukon Railway Navigation and Mining Company, one of whose schemes is the building of a railway from Pyramid Harbour into the Yukon.

Hon. Mr. Mills opposed the bill, and for several reasons. The Hamilton Smith railway would be against Canadian interests, would contribute to lawlessness rather than law and order in the border country, would operate against any Canadian railway enterprise, and would place Canadians under tribute to Americans in a sense and to a degree which is not at all to be desired. The passing of the bill, and the building of this railway, would kill the all-Canadian route, and he opposed it, moving the six months' vote.

The Senate voted the motion down by a strictly party vote. The conservative members have affected to be great Canadians, but they do not hesitate to legislate against their country in aiding Hamilton Smith in his adventures. The all-Canadian railway bill they rejected. They were abandoned to push the Yankee scheme at once, but, as Mr. Mills pointed out, they had no substitute for it, no better proposal, only this doubtful experiment of a foreigner who is working for foreigners.

The Senate refused to shelve the bill or to adjourn the debate upon it. They hurried it through so that the commonsense might kill it as they expected it to do, and as they really wanted it to do. The Tories are on mischief bent and must have something to keep up the strife until Providence reduces the friction by reducing their number. Until this happens, or until conservative rule is re-established, they will only be happy when they are making war upon the liberal government.

A GREAT LIFE GONE OUT.

Canada has lost one of its greatest men in the death of Dalton McCarthy. It is remarkable that despite his carelessness, his desire to avoid accident, a desire exhibited in his avoidance of what was at all likely to be dangerous, even to the use of elevators, because it was known that they sometimes went wrong, he should fall through accident.

He was a lover of horses, and found his chief amusement in driving and riding them; and the shying of one that was taking him to the train on Sunday night, the collision with a telegraph pole and the upset of the cart, led to injuries that terminated fatally. For three days his life hung in the balance, and then the end came.

What an impression follows the study of his life! He began his career modestly, in Barrie, but he was industrious, devoted to his profession, and he rose rapidly, removed to Toronto, formed a partnership with other able and distinguished men, and established a legal business of the most imposing and remunerative kind.

It was managed as the great departmental stores are managed, by experts in each branch. So Mr. B. B. Oler was the commanding figure in the criminal courts, and Mr. McCarthy was the commanding figure in the civil courts, and such were the engagements of the man that time was precious in his hands. He had no leisure for politics, though he liked to be in parliament, and he left his influence there as he left it in the courts by his effective and distinctive service. He is described as a wiry, nervous, and active individual, with a keen, penetrating and vigilant intellect, and a judgment that though not infallible was generally sound.

Best of all he was a man of great independence of character. This was indicated by his political course. A conservative, brought out under the distinguished auspices of Sir John Macdonald, and enjoying that gentleman's confidence in the highest degree, he became the predominant spirit of the party, at least in Ontario, and was called the brains of it. There was no position, no honor, that he did not command. It has been said that owing to disappointment in cabinet aspirations he became offended. But that is an absurdity, and has been stamped as such by a recognized authority. The cabinet and the bench had no attractions for him, and he wielded an influence outside of them, in the freedom he enjoyed, that could not be measured by the ordinary standard.

His rise politically in the conservative party, in its leadership, was only equalled by his fall. He had a mind and a will of his own, and he used them. He evidently consulted a change in policy, in regard to protection, which he preached, and failing to carry his point by one means adopted another. His attitude on several issues, following this, brought him into hostility with his party, but he did not waver in his plans, and carried on his campaign independently and against tremendous odds. He sometimes concurred with the liberals without calling himself a liberal; indeed, in the commonsense he declared that he was neither conservative nor liberal, and his service was in accordance with his profession.

A local conservative, one who regarded himself as a friend and admirer of the late Mr. McCarthy, laments that he went into politics at all, that he did not give himself up wholly to law, in the practice of which he was perhaps without a peer. Two men are mentioned as having some characteristics that Mr. McCarthy did not possess in his court conduct, but no man had more dignity, ability, and power, and no man will be more missed in law or politics. Sorry he went into politics! The Toronto World, reflecting the thoughts of the young conservatives, assumes that had he lived he would have done much towards the "recreation of the conservative party."

"We know men," says the World, "who would scoff at this, but the men who scoff are mostly men who did more to injure the conservative cause than ever he did," and, "perhaps not a little of the new inspiration that may come to the conservative party will spring from his political ashes."

It is a tribute that is worthy of him. He made a great record for himself by his independence and nobility, by the lucidity and incisiveness of his ideas, and he leaves a memory that will be fresh and fragrant for many a year.

A Brantford youth let his sporting ardor go so far that he stole a catcher's glove from Sutherland's store on Tuesday. He was gathered in by the police and had to settle.

Scott's Emulsion is not a "baby food," but is a most excellent food for babies who are not well nourished.

A part of a teaspoonful mixed in milk and given every three or four hours, will give the most happy results.

The cod-liver oil with the hypophosphites added, as in this palatable emulsion, not only feeds the child, but also regulates its digestive functions.

AN ERRING PRINCESS.

After A Campaign of Six She Is Taken To An Asylum.

LONDON, May 13.—A despatch from Vienna to the Daily Chronicle says: "Princess Louise of Saxo-Coburg and Gotha has been conveyed to a private asylum. The princess had clandestinely passed the last few weeks with Lieuk, Von Matzich-Keglich, her lover, at his castle, near Agram, Croatia. In the meantime her debts grew to millions of florins, and bills bearing the alleged forged signature of her archduchess Stephanie came into circulation. Prince Philip of Saxo-Coburg and Gotha had the lieutenant arrested, the suspicion prevailing that he forged the bills without the knowledge of the princess. The latter has been placed under guardians, and King Leopold her father, is prepared to pay her debts and to arrange the matter of the forged bills."
