Who look upon 'bargain sales' with suspicion. They / figure it out that no merchant can afford to sell goods at cost (and thus give bona-fide bargains), so they shrug their shoulders and say, "Oh, I don't believe Mr. So and So is selling goods very cheap." Well, we don't know how others do business, but we do know that our stock must be reduced before July 1st (at which date the change in business occurs), and we also know that we are offering the greatest bargains in Shoes ever known in Kingston. If you are a judge of Shoes our prices will very soon convince you that we mean business.

TEMPERANCE MEN'S PLANS. The Templar, of Hamilton, has suffered reverses, and it is pictured by the Hamil ton Herald as being without the sympathy of the liberals because of its attitude towards them. Its opposition to the Hardy government is accounted for on two grounds: (1) That it wanted to see pun ished those who were understood to have given pledges and not kept them, and (2) that it hoped for more from Mr. Whitney Mr. Hardy seemed likely to grant. The Templar has been very unreasonable. It has wanted Mr. Hardy to do what he had not the power to undertake, according to ato that fact. the decision of the privy council, and it has something in regard to which its friends were afraid to interview him, of which it had no assurance whatever. Why should Mr. Whitney not have his opinions as well as Mr. Hardy? Why should he not state what he was non-committal in the last campaign, purposely so, and the Templar was satisfied. Is it any wonder that some people take little stock in such campaigning? Is it any wonder that the average elector is indifferent towards the plebiscite when a leading member of the temperance alliance, Senator Vidal, says it was not asked for, vatives will be sure to appreciate. and that it is only supported as a contingency of the times? As an indication of public feeling upon an issue that is usually obscured by other issues, in appeals to the people, it is important that this plebiscite should be taken. It is being provided in
